Stefan Svallfors is professor of sociology at Umeå University, Sweden. His research deals mainly with the comparative study of attitudes and values and their links to social structure and institutions. His current research focuses on class differences in attitudes in comparative perspective. He is the editor of Analyzing Inequality: Life Chances and Social Mobility in Comparative Perspective (Stanford University Press, 2005) and author of The Moral Economy of Class: Class and Attitudes in Comparative Perspective (Stanford University Press, 2006).

Jonas Edlund is assistant professor of sociology at Umeå University. He is head of the Swedish part of the International Social Survey Program (ISSP). Edlund's current research focuses on the associations between "varieties of capitalism" and job-characteristics and their links to gender and class.

Mikael Hjerm is assistant professor of sociology at Umeå University. His research focuses mainly on attitudes of nationalism, racism, and questions of integration in different institutional contexts. He is currently interested in how national identities relate to perceptions of the welfare state. Hjerm is head of the Swedish part of the European Social Survey.

Staffan Kumlin is Hans Meijer Pro Futura Fellow at the Department of Political Science, Göteborg University. He studies comparative political behavior and public opinion, and his work has previously appeared in journals such as Comparative Political Studies, Journal of Public Policy, and European Journal of Political Research. He is the author of The Personal and the Political: How Personal Welfare State Experiences Affect Political Trust and Ideology (Palgrave-Macmillan 2004).

Maria Oskarson is assistant professor of political science at Göteborg University. Her research deals mainly with different aspects of the relation between social and political cleavages and attitudes, both from a comparative and national (Swedish) perspective. Her current work is an analysis of political exclusion in Sweden over the last decades.

Maria Pettersson is a Ph.D. candidate at the Department of Political Science, Göteborg University. Her dissertation focuses on the relationship between public service dissatisfaction and political action, with special attention paid to the institutional features of public service areas and how this could affect the extent to which citizens voice their grievances. She will finish her dissertation in 2008.
