

P R E F A C E

This volume emanates from the research program “The Political Sociology of the Welfare State,” financed by the Swedish Council for Social and Working Life Research (FAS 2002-0811; 2005-1694) and the Bank of Sweden Tercentenary Foundation (K2002-0058). The editor has also enjoyed a Research Professor Grant from the Swedish Research Council (421-2003-1977). These grants have made it possible for us to concentrate on our work in a concerted and sustained manner. As sociologists and political scientists working together we have found collaborating across disciplinary boundaries not just intellectually rewarding but genuinely fun. So the grants are proof that governments can make (at least some) people happy (at least some of the time).

A draft version of the volume was discussed at a seminar with invited commentators at the Konrad Adenauer Centre in Cadenabbia, Italy, May 2005. Martin Rhodes, Edeltraud Roller, Michael Shalev, and Erik Olin Wright gave us the most delightful trashing anyone of us has ever experienced. Supporters of academic politeness would probably have found the seminar unbearably straightforward, but to us it was an intellectual delight. The three weeks or so we had expected to use for revisions of the manuscript turned out to be six months—including a complete overhaul of some of the chapters and substantial revisions of most of them. The quality of the volume has benefited immensely from their comments and we are deeply grateful for their time and effort. And it was great fun—not least the unforgettable hike along the slopes around Lago di Como.

We have also benefited from other comments on individual chapters. Among commentators we still remember are Linda Berg, Stefan Dahlberg, Ingrid Esser, Walter Korpi, Johannes Lindvall, Knud Knudsen, Kenneth Nelson, Joakim Palme, Christina Ribbhagen, Jan Teorell, and the participants in the seminar, “Elections, Public Opinion, and Democracy,” at the Department of Political Science, Göteborg University. Our apologies to anyone we may have forgotten—your comments were so excellent that we now imagine we came up with them ourselves!

Jonas Pontusson and John Stephens provided wonderful encouragement and helpful comments in reading the final manuscript. Finally, the editor wants to thank David Grusky for his outstanding ability to dissolve all doubts and for never taking no for an answer. He is simply the most persuasive person found in academia, and Stanford University Press is truly blessed to have a series editor like him.

Stefan Svallfors
Umeå, May 2006