

CONTRIBUTORS

Paul Aarts is senior lecturer in international relations at the Department of Political Science, University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands. He has published widely on Middle Eastern politics and economics. Among his recent publications is Saudi Arabia in the Balance: Political Economy, Society, Foreign Affairs (London and New York: Hurst and New York University Press, 2005/2006), coedited with Gerd Nonneman.

Holger Albrecht is assistant professor at the Institute for Political Science of the University of Tübingen, Germany. He has published articles on authoritarian regime change, political participation and opposition, civil society, and Islamist movements in the Middle East and North Africa in a number of journals and edited volumes.

Philippe Droz-Vincent is assistant professor of political science and teaches at the Institut d'Études Politiques in Paris. He is the author of The American Moment in the Middle East (Paris: La Découverte, 2007 [in French]) and The Middle East: Authoritarian Power, Blocked Societies (Paris: Presses Universitaires de France, 2004 [in French]) as well as "Quel avenir pour l'autoritarisme arabe?" [What Future for Arab Authoritarianism?], Revue Française de Science Politique, 54 (6), 945–979 (2004).

Steven Heydemann is associate vice president of the U.S. Institute of Peace in Washington, DC, and, from 2003–2007, directed the Center for Democracy and Civil Society at Georgetown University. He is the author of Authoritarianism in Syria (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1999) and the editor of War, Institutions, and Social Change in the Middle East (Berkeley: University of California Press, 2000) and of Networks of Privilege in the Middle East: The Politics of Economic Reform Reconsidered (New York: Palgrave, 2004). He is currently working on a book about the persistence of authoritarianism in the Middle East.

xii CONTRIBUTORS

Eberhard Kienle is the author of Ba'ath v. Ba'ath: The Conflict Between Syria and Iraq, 1968–1989 (London: I. B. Tauris, 1990) and A Grand Delusion: Democracy and Economic Reform in Egypt (London: I. B. Tauris, 2001) as well as the editor of several books. Professor Kienle is currently director of the Institut de Recherche et d'Études sur le Monde Arabe et Musulman (IREMAM/CNRS) in Aix-en-Provence, France.

Fred H. Lawson is Rice Professor of Government at Mills College. He is author of Constructing International Relations in the Arab World (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 2006) and Why Syria Goes to War (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1996), among other studies of political economy and foreign policy in the contemporary Middle East.

Giacomo Luciani is the director of the Gulf Research Center office in Geneva and professorial lecturer in Middle Eastern studies at the Johns Hopkins University Bologna Centre. His research interests include political economy of the Middle East and North Africa and geopolitics of energy. His name is primarily associated with work on the rentier state in the Arab world. He has edited The Rentier State (New York: Croom Helm, 1987) with Hazem Beblawi; The Politics of Arab Integration (New York: Croom Helm, 1988) with Ghassan Salamé; and The Arab State (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1990). In recent years Professor Luciani has continued to work on the concept and impact of the rentier state, in particular with respect to democratization in the Arab world.

Ellen Lust-Okar is an associate professor in the Department of Political Science at Yale University. She received her M.A. in Middle Eastern studies and her Ph.D. in political science from the University of Michigan. Her book, Structuring Conflict in the Arab World: Incumbents, Opponents, and Institutions (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2005), examines how institutions structure government-opposition relations in Egypt, Jordan, and Morocco. Other work examining authoritarian politics in the Middle East and North Africa is published in journal articles and book chapters.

Daniela Pioppi is a senior research fellow at the Mediterranean and Middle East Programme of the Italian Institute for International Affairs and lecturer in contemporary history of Egypt at the University of Rome "La Sapienza." Her recent publications include Decline and Revival of an Islamic Institution: The Waqf in Contemporary Egypt (Rome: La Sapienza Orientale Ricerche, 2006 [in Italian]) and The Question of Democracy in the Arab World: States, Societies, Conflicts (Rome: Polimetria, 2004 [in Italian]), co-edited with Federica Bicchi and Laura Guazzone.

Thomas Richter is a Ph.D. candidate at the Graduate School of Social Science of the University of Bremen and the author of Determinants of Economic Policy Making for Micro, Small, and Medium-Sized Enterprises in Egypt (Münster, Germany: Lit, 2004

[in German]). In his thesis, Richter examines how different positions of Middle Eastern states (Morocco, Tunisia, Egypt, and Jordan) in the international and regional systems have influenced the timing and scope of economic liberalization.

Mustapha Kamel Al-Sayyid is professor of political science at Cairo University, and he has also taught at the American University in Cairo, at Harvard Law School, and at Colgate University. He spent a year as a visiting scholar at the University of California, Los Angeles, and two months as a visiting fellow at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. He holds a Ph.D. from the University of Geneva and has widely published in Arabic, English, and French on civil society, processes of political change in Arab countries, and the political economy of development.

Oliver Schlumberger is a senior researcher at the German Development Institute, Bonn, Germany, and the author of Authoritarianism in the Arab World: Causes, Trends, and International Democracy Promotion (Baden-Baden, Germany: Nomos, 2007 [in German; English edition in preparation]). His research focuses on Middle Eastern politics and political economy as well as on nondemocratic regimes and democracy promotion. He obtained his Ph.D. in political science from Tübingen University, where he served as assistant professor until 2004.

Peter Sluglett has been professor of Middle Eastern history at the University of Utah since 1994. He obtained his D.Phil. from Oxford University in 1976 and has written extensively on the history of the Middle East in the late nineteenth and twentieth centuries, focusing principally on Iraq and Syria. He is co-author (with Marion Farouk-Sluglett) of Iraq Since 1958: From Revolution to Dictatorship, 3d ed. (London: I. B. Tauris, 2001). His latest book, Britain in Iraq: Contriving King and Country, an extensively revised and updated edition of Britain in Iraq 1914–1932 (London: Ithaca Press, 1976), was published by I. B. Tauris (London) in 2007.

Marc Valeri is a lecturer in political science and constitutional law at La Rochelle University (France) and holds a Ph.D. in political science from the Institut d'Études Politiques of Paris. He is the author of Le sultanat d'Oman: Une révolution en trompe-l'œil. (Paris: Karthala, 2007) and has contributed to the Études du CERI (2005) and to several international conferences on the Gulf. His current research interest is on authoritarianism and political legitimacy in Oman and the Gulf.

Eva Wegner is a postdoctoral fellow at the German Institute for International and Strategic Studies (Stiftung Wissenschaft und Politik) in Berlin, where she is working on the Jordanian Islamic Action Front and, comparatively, on the political inclusion of Islamist movements. She holds a Ph.D. in political science from the European University Institute (Florence, Italy). On Moroccan Islamists she has contributed to the Journal of North African Studies and to the Arab Reform Bulletin.