

Contributors

Terry L. Anderson is the executive director of the Property and Environment Research Center (PERC), Bozeman, Montana; senior fellow at the Hoover Institution, Stanford University; and professor emeritus at Montana State University. His work helped launch the idea of “free market environmentalism” with the publication of his book, coauthored with Donald R. Leal, by that title. Anderson is the author or editor of thirty books, including the most recent, Self-Determination: The Other Path for Native Americans, coedited with Bruce L. Benson and Thomas E. Flanagan. He has published widely in both professional journals and the popular press, including the Wall Street Journal, the Christian Science Monitor, and Fly Fisherman.

Timothy Fitzgerald graduated in 1997 from Bowdoin College with a bachelor’s degree in economics and is now a graduate student at the University of Maryland. His research spans wildlife, energy, and institutional topics. Fitzgerald formerly ran an outfitting business in western Colorado, guiding anglers and hunters and also running cattle for local ranchers on federal lands. Fitzgerald was a Research Associate with PERC, and his article “The Quincy Library Affair” was featured in the March 1998 issue of PERC Reports.

A. Myrick Freeman III is the William D. Shipman Professor of Economics Emeritus at Bowdoin College where he taught for thirty-five years before retiring in 2000. He has also held appointments as a senior fellow at Resources for the Future, a visiting college professor at the University of Washington, and the Robert M. La Follette Visiting Distinguished Professor at the University of Wisconsin–Madison. He is the author of many journal articles and several books, including The Benefits of Environmental Improvement: Theory and Practice (1979) and The Measurement of Environmental and Resource Values: Theory and Methods (1993), which were cited by the Association of Environmental and Resource Economists as Publications of Enduring Value in 2003. Freeman has also served on the Science Advisory Board of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Holly Lippke Fretwell is a PERC research fellow and an adjunct professor at Montana State University, where she earned a bachelor’s degree in political science and master's degree in resource economics. She is author and coauthor of numerous articles on natural resource issues; her current emphasis is on public lands management. She has presented papers promoting the use of markets in public land management and has provided expert testimony on the state of our national parks and the future of the U.S. Forest Service.

David D. Haddock is an economist who has been a member of the Northwestern University faculty since 1988 and a senior fellow of PERC since 1997. Haddock is a specialist in law and economics as well as several related fields and holds the rank of professor in both the economics department and the law school. He has contributed chapters to a number of PERC books. Haddock sees his present mission as helping to correct the widespread and costly misunderstandings regarding the meaning and implications of the economic concept of public goods.

F. Andrew Hanssen is associate professor of economics at Montana State University. Hanssen has published articles in a number of refereed journals, including the American Economic Review; the Journal of Law and Economics; the Journal of Law, Economics, and Organization; and the Journal of Legal Studies. Several of his articles have been republished in books. Hanssen received a B.A. and M.A. from Johns Hopkins University, and an M.B.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Chicago. Before getting his Ph.D., he was a management consultant, working in Europe, Latin America, and the Far East.

Laura E. Huggins is a research fellow and director of development at PERC as well as a research fellow at the Hoover Institution, Stanford University. Huggins is the author, along with Terry L. Anderson, of Property Rights: A Practical Guide to Freedom and Prosperity (2003). She also edited Population Puzzle: Boom or Bust? (2004) and Drug War Deadlock: The Policy Battle Continues (2005). Huggins has published several articles and papers, including "A Property Rights Path to Sustainable Development," which appeared in The Legacy of Milton and Rose Friedman's Free to Choose: Economic Liberalism at the Turn of the 21st Century (2004). Huggins holds a master's degree in public policy from Utah State University.

Ronald N. Johnson received his Ph.D. in economics from the University of Washington in 1977 and joined the faculty at the University of New Mexico as an assistant professor. He moved to Montana State University in 1981 and retired as full professor in 2001. Since, he has been a visiting professor at the Economics Education and Research Consortium, National University of Ukraine, and the University of California, San Diego. Johnson's research has focused on natural resource issues, industrial organization, and political economy. His articles have appeared in the American Economic Review, Journal of Political Economy, Review of Economics and Statistics, Journal of Law and Economics, Economic Inquiry, and numerous other journals.

Daniel Kemmis is a senior fellow at the University of Montana's Center for the Rocky Mountain West. A past director of the center, Kemmis was formerly mayor of Missoula, Montana, and a former speaker and minority leader of the Montana House of Representatives. Kemmis is the author of three books: Community and the Politics of Place; The Good City and the Good Life; and This Sovereign Land: A New Vision for Governing the West.

Donald R. Leal is a senior fellow at PERC, where he has been carrying out research in natural resource and environmental issues since 1985. Leal has written numerous articles on such topics as privatizing ocean fisheries, water marketing for fish and wildlife, creating self-sustaining parks, and applying the trust concept to public lands. His pieces have appeared in the Wall Street Journal, New York Times, and Chicago Tribune, as well as specialized journals. His current projects include assessing the impact of individual transferable quota programs in fishery management throughout the world. He received his B.S. in mathematics and M.S. in statistics from California State University at Hayward.

Roger E. Meiners is the Goolsby Distinguished Professor of law and economics at the University of Texas at Arlington and a senior fellow of PERC. His research focuses on common law and market solutions to environmental issues and on the economics of higher education. Meiners serves on the board of the Institute for Policy Innovation and has published numerous books, including Taking the Environment Seriously (with Bruce Yandle), Government v. the Environment (with Donald Leal), Agricultural Policy and the Environment (with Yandle). He has also published in various popular and scholarly journals.

Andrew P. Morriss is the H. Ross and Helen Workman Professor of Law and a professor of business at the University of Illinois and senior fellow at PERC. He is coauthor of Regulation by Litigation (with Bruce Yandle and Andrew Dorohok) (2008).

Dominic P. Parker is a senior research fellow with PERC and is also a National Science Foundation fellow and Ph.D. student in economics and environmental science at the University of California, Santa Barbara. His research to date has focused on private land conservation, economic development on American Indian reservations, and the economics of public bureaucracies. He holds an M.S. degree in applied economics from Montana State University where his research on wildlife agencies was awarded Best Thesis by the American Agricultural Economics Association.

Thomas Michael Power is a professor of economics and chair of the economics department at the University of Montana. He specializes in natural resource and environmental economics and their relationship to local and regional development. He is author of five books, including Lost Landscapes and Failed Economies: The Search for Value of Place (1996) and Post-Cowboy Economics: Pay and Prosperity in the New American West (2001).