

Contents

Introduction: The Business of The Business of Letters, 1

1. From the Profession of Authorship to the Business of Letters, 9

- The Professional Paradigm, 10
- Toward a Theory of Multiple Economies, 23
- Economies Embedded and Disembedded, 37
- The Disembedding of the Economy, 48

2. The Black Bard and the Black Market, 53

- George Moses Horton and the Black Market, 54
 - "Bid the Vassal Rise," 61
 - Manumission Campaigns, 67
 - The Hope of Liberty, 69
 - Taking Liberties, 79
- Other Bards, Other Markets, 82

3. Authorship and Gift Exchange, 89

- "Tablets of vanity; archives of pride and flattery": Albums, 97
- "I write to you out of mere humanity": Letters, 109
- "Damn you send me a paper": Exchange Networks, 120
- "Hammydiddle in plenty but no pay": The Southern Literary Messenger, 126
- The Freeing of the Gift, 139

4. Toward a History of Literary Debt, 142

- Accounting for Subscriber Dereliction, 146
- Rural Economics and Traditional Debt Ways, 151
- The World of the Literary Dun, 162
- The Discrediting of the American Reader, 173
- The New Yorker* and the Return of Literary Credit, 183

5. Literary Competitions and the Culture of Emulation, 186

The Culture of Emulation, 190

The Park Street Competition, 199

The Example of Charles Sprague, 205

Prize Inflation and Prize Criticism, 214

Edgar Allan Poe and the World of Competitions, 218

The Routinization of the Prize, 231

Epilogue: From the Business of Letters to the Profession of Authorship, 235*Notes*, 245*Index*, 319