

Contributors

ANNE R. BOWER is CEO of Tyler Research Associates, a qualitative health care research consulting service. She is also adjunct assistant professor in the Department of Medicine, New Jersey Institute for Successful Aging at the University of Medicine & Dentistry of New Jersey School of Osteopathic Medicine. Her recent publications include Redefining Dementia Units: A Roadmap for Culture Change (2008), coauthored with William Senders.

NOBUTAKA DOBA (MD and PhD, Chiba University School of Medicine) had a long career in clinical medicine in cardiology. After retiring as the head of Teikyo University Ichihara Hospital, he has devoted himself to encouraging the evolution of a new lifestyle for the elderly. His current interests focus on frailty among the elderly, especially its progression and prevention, and he has been carrying out an observational cohort study at the Life Planning Center as a senior medical consultant. He is the author of A Handbook of Clinical Geriatrics for All Health Care Professionals (Igaku-shoin, 2005).

CARLA L. FISHER (PhD, Penn State University, 2008) is an assistant professor of communication studies at Arizona State University. She is a former predoctoral fellow with the National Institute on Aging and completed the advanced training institute on health behavior theory cosponsored by the National Cancer Institute. Her research focuses on the centrality of family communication to wellness across the life span, particularly during health and aging transitions. Her research has been published in books and journals including Health Communication and the Journal of Language and Social Psychology. Her recent work on how women diagnosed with breast cancer adapt through mother-daughter communication will be published in Hampton Press's health communication book series.

HOWARD GILES is professor of communication at the University of California, Santa Barbara. Prior to that he was head of psychology and chair of social psychology at the University of Bristol, England, where he also obtained his doctorates. His interests revolve around many domains in the study of intergroup communication and he has had a long-standing investment in cross-cultural studies of aging and intergenerational communication. He has over 400 publications (including 20 books), dozens in the area of cross-cultural gerontology.

TOSHIKO HAMAGUCHI (PhD, linguistics, Georgetown University) is lecturer in the Department of English Language and Literature at the University of the Sacred Heart, Tokyo. Her research interests include aging and communication, intergenerational family discourse, the discourse of people with Alzheimer's disease, and multimodal discourse.

GIYOO HATANO, PhD, who passed away in January 2006, was an internationally well-known researcher in cognitive development. He was involved in research on naïve biology, conceptual changes, and classroom learning. His publications include Young Children's Naïve Thinking about the Biological World (with K. Inagaki; Psychology Press, 2002) and "When Is Conceptual Change Intended? A Cognitive-Sociocultural View" in Intentional Conceptual Change (with K. Inagaki; Erlbaum, 2003).

SHIGEAKI HINOHARA (MD, Kyoto Imperial University, 1937; PhD, Kyoto University, 1941) began working as an internist at St. Luke's International Hospital in 1941, and later became head of the department of internal medicine and deputy director and then director of the hospital. He is currently chairman of the board of trustees and honorary president of the hospital. He established the Life Planning Center, a foundation that seeks to reform medical care with a focus on patient education, in 1973, and continues to serve as its president. In 2000, he founded the Association of the New Elderly. Hinohara remains active as the elder statesman of clinical medicine in Japan. His numerous publications include Jūdai no kimi e: 95-sai no watashi kara (Advice from myself at 95 to you as a teenager) (Toyamabō International, 2006) and Kōreisha no kenkōgaku (Health science for the elderly) (Sōeisha/Sanseidō Shoten, 2007), coauthored with Nobutaka Doba.

HIKARI HORI (PhD, visual culture and gender studies, Gakushin University, 2004) is Assistant Professor of Japanese film and visual culture, East Asian Languages and Cultures Department at Columbia University. She has worked as a research associate at the National Film Center, Tokyo, and also as a film program coordinator at the Japan Society, New York. Her publications include “Oshima Nagisa’s ‘Ai no korida’ Reconsidered: Law, Gender, and Sexually Explicit Film in Japanese Cinema,” in Creekmur and Sidel, eds., Cinema, Law and the State in Asia (Palgrave, 2007), and “Migration and Transgression: Female Pioneers’ Documentary Filmmaking in Japan,” Asian Cinema Journal 11 (2005).

SUSAN ORPETT LONG (PhD, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign) is professor of anthropology and founding coordinator of the East Asian Studies program at John Carroll University. Her ethnographic research has focused on bioethics and culture, gender and family, and aging and elder care in Japan. She is the author of Final Days: Japanese Culture and Choice at the End of Life (University of Hawaii Press, 2005) and numerous book chapters and articles. She also edited Caring for the Elderly in Japan and the US: Practices and Policies (Routledge, 2000) and Lives in Motion: Composing Circles of Self and Community in Japan (Cornell East Asia Series, 1999).

YOSHIKO MATSUMOTO (PhD, linguistics, University of California at Berkeley) is associate professor of Japanese in the Department of East Asian Languages and Cultures and by courtesy, in the Department of Linguistics, at Stanford University, as well as an affiliate of the Stanford Center on Longevity and the Clayman Institute for Gender Research. Her research interests include linguistic pragmatics, in particular, how certain meanings are conveyed and construed by the speaker and the listener. Her publications include Noun-Modifying Constructions in Japanese: A Frame Semantic Approach (1997), “Discourse of the Elderly from the Speaker’s Point of View” (2008), and “Dealing with Changes—Humorous Self-Disclosure by Elderly Japanese Women” (2009).

NATSUMI MORITA (PhD, St. Luke’s College of Nursing, Tokyo) is associate professor of nursing and medical care at Keio University. Her publications include Shinpan: Kango no tame no wakariyasui keesu sutadii (Case study: From theme-setting to report writing for nursing, new edition) (Tokyo: Shorinsha), and “Ketsueki tōseki ryōhō o ukete seikatsu suru mansei jinfuzen kanja no “kimochi” no kōzō” (The structure of kimochi in patients living with hemodialysis of end-stage renal disease), Journal of St. Luke’s Society for Nursing Research 12 (2) (2008).

JON F. NUSSBAUM (PhD, Purdue, 1981) is professor of communication arts & sciences and human development & family studies at Penn State University. He was formerly president of the International Communication Association, editor of the Journal of Communication, and a Fulbright Research Fellow in the UK. He is currently a fellow of the International Communication Association and a fellow within the Adult Development and Aging Division of the American Psychological Association. Nussbaum has published 13 books and over 80 journal articles and book chapters on communication behaviors and patterns across the life span, including research on family, friendship, and professional relationships with older adults. Among his recent books are Brain Health and Optimal Engagement for Older Adults and Communication and Intimacy for Older Adults. His current research centers on quality health care for older adults, health care organizations, and intimacy across the life span.

HIROSHI OTA (PhD, University of California, Santa Barbara, 2001) is professor of communication at Aichi Shukutoku University. His research interests revolve around the social psychological processes involved in intergroup communication between age and cultural groups. His recent works include “Investigating Cancer and Aging in Cultural Perspective” (coauthored with Loretta Pecchioni and others) and “Beliefs about Intra- and Intergenerational Communication in Japan, the Philippines, and the United States: Implications for Older Adults’ Subjective Well-Being” (coauthored with Howard Giles and Lilnabeth Somera).

KEIKO TAKAHASHI, PhD, is professor emeritus at University of the Sacred Heart, Tokyo. Her work focuses on the life-span development of social relationships and its relation to culture, and the development of social cognitions. Her publications include “Toward a Lifespan Theory of Close Relationships,” Human Development 48 (2005); “Japan” in International Encyclopedia of Adolescence (Routledge, 2006); and Human Relationships: Life Span Development of Affective Networks (Tokyo University Press, 2010).

MAKIKO TOKORO, PhD, is a lecturer at Toyo Gakuen University. She is working on successful aging among older adults through participation in sociocultural activity.

JOHN W. TRAPHAGAN is associate professor of religious studies at the University of Texas at Austin. He is the author of numerous articles and books including Taming Oblivion: Aging Bodies and the Fear of Senility in Japan and The Practice of Concern: Ritual, Well-Being, and Aging in Rural Japan. His work has appeared in journals such as Alzheimer Disease and Associated Disorders, the Journal of Adult Development, Ethnology, the Journal of Anthropological Research, Research on Aging, and the Asia Pacific Journal of Anthropology. He is currently secretary general of the Japan Anthropology Workshop.