

About the Contributors

José Carlos G. Aguiar is assistant professor at the Department of Cultures and Languages of Latin America at Leiden University. He is primarily interested in illegal commodities, liminal spaces, and policing in Latin America. He combines the ethnography of illegalities with sociological theory. His dissertation, entitled “Dirty CDs: Piracy, Globalisation and the Emergence of New Illegalities in the San Juan de Dios Market,” analyzed the rise of commodity chains and transnational networks in the retail of illegal CDs and DVDs in the Mexican marketplace. He is also a member of the editorial board of Etnofoor.

Marcos Aguila holds an academic position at UAM-Xochimilco, Mexico. He studied economics at UAM-Xochimilco and UNAM, and received a PhD in history from the University of Texas at Austin (1997). He belongs to the Sistema Nacional de Investigadores since 1990. He has specialized in the study of labor and miners in Mexico during the decade of the 1930s. He has published several books, including Economía y trabajo en la minería mexicana: La emergencia de un nuevo pacto social entre la Gran Depresión y el Cardenismo (Mexico, 2004). He coauthored two textbooks, Vivir la Historia II and III (Mexico, 1998 and 2000). He also coedited Personajes, ideas, voluntades: Políticos e intelectuales mexicanos en los años treinta (Mexico, 2011). With Jeffrey Bortz, he published “Making a Living: A History of Real Wage Studies During XXth Century Mexico,” in Latin American Research Review, vol. 41, no. 2, 2006.

Jeffrey Bortz teaches history at Appalachian State University. He is the author of numerous books and scholarly articles on Mexican labor affairs. His most recent book is Revolution Within the Revolution: Cotton Textile Workers and the Mexican Labor Regime, 1910–1923 (Stanford, 2008).

Diane E. Davis is Head of the International Development Group in the Department of Urban Studies and Planning at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. She has published widely on problems of urban power and management. In 1994 she published Urban Leviathan: Mexico City in the Twentieth Century. In recent years, she has done research about the police and other actors of violence in Latin America and elsewhere. She coedited "Violence, Coercion, and Rights in the Americas," a special issue of Latin American Perspectives (2000), and Irregular Armed Forces and Their Role in Politics and State Formation (Cambridge, 2003). She is also active in social theorizing in a more general way. She is editor of Political Power and Social Theory and published Discipline and Development: Middle Classes and Prosperity in East Asia and Latin America (Cambridge, 2004).

Paul Gillingham holds an Andrew W. Mellon Postdoctoral Fellowship in the Humanities at the Penn Humanities Forum of the University of Pennsylvania. He has published widely on state formation and nationalism in Mexico. Recent articles and book chapters focus on village schoolteachers, popular protest, bullfighting, violence, military politics, and archaeological fraud in Latin America. He is the author of Cuauhtémoc's Bones: Nationalism & Forgery in Mexico (Albuquerque, 2011) and the coeditor of Soft Authoritarianism in Mexico, 1938–1968 (Durham, forthcoming.). His articles have appeared in Mexican Studies/Estudios Mexicanos, the Journal of Latin American Studies, and Past & Present.

John Gledhill is Max Gluckman Professor of Social Anthropology and Co-Director of the Centre for Latin American Cultural Studies at the University of Manchester, Co-Managing Editor of Critique of Anthropology, and Chair of the Association of Social Anthropologists of the UK and Commonwealth (2005–2009). His publications include Casi Nada: Agrarian Reform in the Homeland of Cardenismo (Albany, 1991), Neoliberalism, Transnationalization and Rural Poverty (Boulder, 1995), Power and Its Disguises: Anthropological Perspectives on Politics (London, 2000), and Cultura y desafío en Ostula: Cuatro siglos de autonomía indígena en la Costa-Sierra Nahua de Michoacán (Zamora, 2004).

Alan Knight studied at Oxford University and has taught at the University of Essex, the University of Texas at Austin, and Oxford University, where he holds the Chair of Latin American History and has been Director of the Latin American Centre. He is the author of The Mexican Revolution (2 vols.) (Cambridge, 1986) and the first two books in a planned trilogy, Mexico: From the Beginning to the Conquest and Mexico: The Colonial Era (both Cambridge, 2002). He has also written on U.S.-Mexican relations, Mexican politics, and themes in broader Latin American history (revolutions, populism, democracy). He is currently working on the third volume of the trilogy (Mexico Since Independence) and a study of Mexico in the 1930s, provisionally entitled The Triumph of the Revolution?

Kees Koonings is Professor of Brazilian Studies at the Centre for Latin American Research and Documentation (CEDLA) in Amsterdam, and Associate Professor of Latin American Studies at Utrecht University. His research interests include urban and regional development, citizenship and social movements, conflict and violence, the military, and democratization, particularly in Brazil and Colombia. He has coedited a number of volumes in recent years, among them Armed Actors: Organised Violence and State Failure in Latin America (London, 2004) and Fractured Cities: Social Exclusion, Urban Violence & Contested Spaces in Latin America (London, 2007).

Wil G. Pansters is Professor of Latin American Studies and Director of the Mexican Studies Centre, both at the University of Groningen, and Associate Professor at the Department of Cultural Anthropology at Utrecht University. His research interests include regional and urban politics, caciquismo, political culture and democratization, violence and insecurity, and higher education in Latin America, especially Mexico. He has also been active in the wider field of development studies. He has published widely on these topics. Among his most recent publications are the coedited volumes Globalization and Development: Issues and Debates in Current Research (Dordrecht, 2004) and Caciquismo in Twentieth-Century Mexico (London, 2005).

Kathy Powell is an anthropologist and lecturer in the School of Political Science and Sociology at the National University of Ireland Galway. Her research interests include the impact of neoliberalism upon social economy and political-cultural practices in rural Mexico, focusing on relations of power, clientelism, and political ideology. Her interests also include political identity and “informality” in Cuba. Among her most recent publications are “Mexican Campesinos, the Neoliberal State and Contesting Interpretations of Social Justice,” in Irish Journal of Anthropology vol. VII, no. 1, 2004 and “San Sebastián: The Social and Political Effects of Sugar Mill Closure in Mexico” in New Solutions, vol. 17, no. 1, 2007.

Mónica Serrano is Executive Director of the Global Centre for the Responsibility to Protect (New York), Professor of International Relations at El Colegio de México (Mexico City), and a Senior Research Associate at the Centre for International Studies, Oxford University. She has written extensively on international security and the international relations of Latin America, with particular reference to international institutions, security, transnational crime, and civil-military relations. She is the author and editor of numerous publications including The Human Rights Regime in the Americas: Theory and Reality (Tokyo, 2010), Regionalism and Governance in the Americas: Continental Drift (Basingstoke, 2005), and Transnational Organized Crime and International Security: Business as Usual? (Boulder, 2002).

David A. Shirk is the Director of the Trans-Border Institute and Assistant Professor in the Political Science Department at the University of San Diego. He was a fellow at the UCSD Center for U.S.-Mexican Studies from 1998 to 1999 and 2001 to 2003, and a fellow at the Woodrow Wilson Center for International Scholars in 2009–2010. He is currently the principal investigator for the Justice in Mexico project (www.justiceinmexico.org), a binational research initiative on criminal justice and the rule of law in Mexico. He conducts research on Mexican politics, U.S.-Mexican relations, and law enforcement and security along the U.S.-Mexican border. His recent publications include the coauthored book Contemporary Mexican Politics (Plymouth, 2009), Reforming the Administration of Justice in Mexico (San Diego; Notre Dame, 2007) and Mexico's New Politics: The PAN and Democratic Change (Boulder, 2005).