

Contents

Acknowledgment	ix
Note to Readers	x
Foreword by Jonah Levy	xi
Introduction	1
1. The British Business Model versus the European Social Model	17
The Activist, Innovative State, 18
The Resumption of Public Investment, 22
A Long-term Project, 24
Improving Competitiveness, 26
Incentives and Coercion on the Labor Market, 29
Social-Democratic Options?, 32
The Issue of Inequalities, 35
Uneven Achievements, 38
2. Bureaucratic Revolution, or Privatization of Public Services?	42
Transformation of Public Action and the State Apparatus: The Thatcher Revolution, 44
Think Tanks and the New Labour Elites, 47
“Activist” Governments, 49
Control through Information, 54
Auditing Society, 59
3. Decentralizing or Centralizing Institutions?	62
Polycentric and Asymmetrical Governance, 64
Constitutional Reform: Tinkering in Progress, 71
The “Europeanization” of British Politics?, 76
Centralization of the Executive, 80
Communications and Rationalization of the Executive, 83
4. The Reinvention of the Labour Party. “New Labour, New Britain”	88
Loosening the Links with the Trade Unions, 90
Promoting a Direct Relationship with Members, 93
A “Managed” and Disciplined Party, 96

A Search for Effective and Professional Funding, 98	The Party as Communications Enterprise, 100	Discussion and Control of the Policy Agenda, 101	New Labour's Media Offensive, 104
5. Democratization or Control?	110
The Citizen-Consumer, 111	Virtual Engagement and Real Funding, 115	Participatory Democracy, Democratic Illusion, 119	The Return of Protest, 122
Order and Security: "Cruel Britannia," 124
Conclusion: Toward a Market Society	133
Postscript: The Fall of New Labour	143
Devolution: From British Politics to National Arenas, 147	New Labour and the Global Economic Crisis, 149	The Party: What Happens to New Labour ?, 152	From Crises to Disaster, Catastrophe, and Debacle, 155
Notes	159
Bibliography	175		