

Contributors

Wyn Bowen is Professor of Non-Proliferation and International Security at King's College London, where he is also Director of the Centre for Science and Security Studies in the Department of War Studies. His publications include Libya and Nuclear Proliferation (IISS Adelphi Paper, 2006); The Politics of Ballistic Missile Non-Proliferation (Macmillan, 2000); The Global Partnership against WMD: Success and Shortcomings of G8 Threat Reduction since 9/11 (RUSI Whitehall Paper, 2011), with Alan Heyes and Hugh Chalmers; and "Iran's Nuclear Challenge: Nine Years and Counting," International Affairs (2011), with Jonathan Brewer.

Sherman Garnett is Dean of the James Madison College of Public Affairs at Michigan State University. He served in the Office of Secretary of Defense from 1984 until 1994, working during the last few years as the Assistant Secretary for Russia, Ukraine, and Eurasia during the crucial phase of the trilateral talks on Ukrainian denuclearization. He became a Senior Associate at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace in 1994, publishing his Keystone in the Arch: Ukraine and the Emerging Security Environment of Eastern and Central Europe in 1997.

Thomas Jonter is Professor of International Relations in the Department of Economic History, Stockholm University. He is also chair of the ESARDA (European Safeguards and Research Development Association) working group for Training and Knowledge Management. Professor Jonter has been a visiting scholar at the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI) and the Europe Center at the Freeman Spogli Institute for International Studies, Stanford University. His recent publications include “The Swedish Plans to Acquire Nuclear Weapons, 1965–1968: An Analysis of the Technical Preparations,” Science and Global Security (2010); “Between Welfare and Warfare: The Rise and Fall of the ‘Swedish Line’ in Nuclear Engineering,” coauthored with Maja Fjaestad, in Science for Welfare and Warfare (Science History Publications, 2010); and “Nuclear Power without Nuclear Weapons,” in Terrorism and Global Insecurity: A Multidisciplinary Perspective (Linton Atlantic Books, 2009).

Jeff Knopf is Professor and Chair of the Nonproliferation and Terrorism Studies Program at the Monterey Institute of International Studies. Dr. Knopf is the author of Domestic Society and International Cooperation: The Impact of Protest on U.S. Arms Control Policy (Cambridge University Press, 1998) and is a former editor of The Nonproliferation Review. His essay “The Fourth Wave in Deterrence Research” won the Bernard Brodie Prize for the best article in Contemporary Security Policy in 2010.

Joyce Lee is a Research Associate in the Korean Studies Program at the Walter H. Shorenstein Asia-Pacific Research Center at Stanford University. Her research focuses on Northeast Asian security issues and U.S. foreign policy toward the region. Ms. Lee received a double Bachelors degree in Political Science and Psychology from University of Washington and a Masters degree in Public Policy from Cornell University.

John S. Park is a senior adviser at the U.S. Institute of Peace and a research fellow at the Harvard Kennedy School’s Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs. His publications include “North Korea, Inc.: Gaining Insights into North Korean Regime Stability from Recent Commercial Activities” (USIP Press, April 2009), and “North Korea’s Nuclear Policy Behavior: Deterrence and Leverage,” in The Long Shadow: Nuclear Weapons and Security in 21st Century Asia (Stanford University Press, 2008).

John Simpson is Professor of International Relations at the University of Southampton, UK, and a Visiting Professor at the Centre for Science and Security Studies at King’s College London. He has also been program director of the Programme for Promoting Nuclear Nonproliferation (PPNN); a member of the UN Secretary General’s Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters; and since 1999 an advisor to UK delegations to NPT meetings and conferences. Dr. Simpson’s recent articles include “Is the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty Fit for the Purpose?” (UNA-UK Briefing Report, 2011) and “British Nuclear Weapon Stockpiles, 1953–78: A Commentary on Technical and Political Drivers” (RUSI Journal, 2011).

Scott Snyder is Senior Fellow for Korea Studies and Director of the Program on U.S.-Korea Policy at the Council on Foreign Relations. He was formerly Director of the Center for U.S.-Korea Policy at the Asia Foundation, where he also served as Korea country representative from 2000 to 2004. Mr. Snyder has worked as an Asia specialist in the Research and Studies Program of the U.S. Institute of Peace, and served as Acting Director of the Asia Society’s Contemporary Affairs Program. His books include China’s Rise and the Two Koreas: Politics, Economics, Security (Lynne Rienner, 2009) and Negotiating on the Edge: North Korean Negotiating Behavior (USIP, 1999). He is also the editor of The U.S.-South Korea Alliance: Meeting New Security Challenges (Lynne Rienner, 2012) and coeditor of Paved with Good Intentions: The NGO Experience in North Korea (Praeger, 2003).

Janice Gross Stein is the Belzberg Professor of Conflict Management in the Department of Political Science and the Director of the Munk School for Global Affairs at the University of Toronto. She is the coauthor, with Eugene Lang, of the prize-winning The Unexpected War: Canada in Kandahar (Penguin, 2007) and coeditor, with Peter Gourevitch and David Lake, of The Credibility of Transnational NGOs (Cambridge University Press, 2012). She also edited the book Diplomacy in the Digital Age: Essays in Honour of Ambassador Allan Gottlieb (Random House, 2011).

Yuki Tatsumi is a Senior Associate with the East Asia Program at the Henry L. Stimson Center. She is the author of Japan’s National Security Policy Infrastructure: Can Tokyo Meet Washington’s Expectations? (Stimson, 2008), as well as a coauthor with Andrew L. Oros of Global Security Watch: Japan (Praeger, 2010). She is also a recipient of the 2009 Yasuhiro Nakasone Incentive Award. She holds a B.A. in Liberal Arts from International Christian University in Tokyo, Japan, and an M.A. in International Economics and International Relations from the Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS) of Johns Hopkins University.

Jim Walsh is a Research Associate at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology’s Security Studies Program. He is one of a handful of Americans who have traveled to both Iran and North Korea for talks with officials about nuclear issues. Before coming to MIT, Dr. Walsh was Executive Director of the Managing the Atom project at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government and a visiting scholar at the Center for Global Security Research at Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory. He is the author of Dangerous Myths: North Korea, the United States, and the Future of Asia (Yale University Press, 2012).

James J. Wirtz is Dean of the School of International Graduate Studies, Naval Postgraduate School, Monterey, California, and Director of the Global Center for Security Cooperation, Defense Security Cooperation Agency. He is coeditor of Complex Deterrence: Strategy in the Global Age (University of Chicago Press, 2009) and of Over the Horizon Proliferation Threats (Stanford University Press, 2012).