

Contributors

Dan Bogart is an economic historian whose research is on infrastructure development and property rights. He is an associate professor in the Department of Economics at the University of California, Irvine. His publications deal with the evolution of property rights in Britain, the effects of transport improvements on British economic development, network externalities, and the causes and consequences of state ownership in railways. He is currently writing a book on the role of political and legal change in Britain's early transport development.

Metin M. Coşgel is Professor of Economics at the University of Connecticut, Storrs. His research interests include the political economy of religion, particularly the nature and consequences of the legitimization relationship between the rulers and legal-religious scholars in Islamic history. He is also interested in the economic history of the Ottoman Empire, including the systems of taxation and law enforcement. His recent work includes articles in the Journal of Comparative Economics (2009), Journal of Economic Behavior and Organization (2009), and Public Finance Review (2009). He is also maintaining a Web site on the "Economic History of the Ottoman Empire" (ottoman.uconn.edu). Personal Web site: cosgel.uconn.edu.

Jessica Dijkman is a postdoctoral researcher in economic history at Utrecht University (the Netherlands), where she also received her PhD in 2010. Her PhD research focused on commodity market institutions in medieval Holland. Her current research compares the organization of crafts in early medieval Iraq, high medieval Italy, and the late medieval Low Countries.

Oscar Gelderblom is an economic historian whose main research interest is the history of Europe before the Industrial Revolution. He is an associate professor at the Department of History of Utrecht University (the Netherlands). His publications deal with financial markets, the organization of foreign trade, entrepreneurship, collective action, migration, and political economy. His current work is on the evolution of financial markets in the Low Countries before 1800.

John O. Haley is currently (as of August 2010) Professor of Law at the Vanderbilt Law School and the William R. Orthwein Distinguished Professor of Law Emeritus of the Washington University in St. Louis School of Law. He is also Affiliate Professor of Law at the University of Washington School of Law. He is a widely published comparative law scholar whose primary field of expertise is Japanese law. Among his most recent publications are Antitrust in Germany and Japan: The First Fifty Years, 1947–1998 (Seattle: University of Washington Press, 2001) and The Spirit of Japanese Law (Athens: University of Georgia Press, 1998; paperback ed. 2006).

Mio Kishimoto is Professor of the Department of Comparative History at Ochanomizu University, Tokyo. Her major field of research is the socio-economic history of early modern China. She is the author of “The Ch’ing Dynasty and the East Asian World,” Acta Asiatica, no. 88 (January 2005); and “Social Turbulence and Local Autonomy: Japanese Historians Interpret Chinese Social Groupings,” Modern China, vol. 30, no. 1 (June 2009).

Debin Ma is a faculty member of the Economic History Department of the London School of Economics and an Adjunct Professor (special term appointment) at the Shanghai University of Finance and Economics. His research focuses on the long-run economic growth of China and East Asia in a comparative and global perspective, and he has published extensively in prominent academic outlets on topics ranging from comparative modernization of China and Japan and living standards in early modern Europe and East Asia to the political and legal history of traditional China and East Asia. He has worked, taught, and lectured extensively in China, Japan, the United States, and Europe for the past decade.

Toru Miura is Professor at the Department of Comparative History at Ochanomizu University, Japan. He is a specialist on Islamic social history and has published widely on this topic. He is the coeditor of Islamic Urban Studies (London: Kegan Paul International, 1994) and Slave Elites in the Middle East and Africa (London: Kegan Paul International, 2000).

Larry Neal is Emeritus Professor of Economics at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, Research Associate of the National Bureau of Economic Research, and Visiting Professor at the London School of Economics. Specializing in financial history and European economics, he is author of The Rise of Financial Capitalism: International Capital Markets in the Age of Reason (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1990). His recent publications include The Economics of Europe and the European Union (2008) and The Origins and Development of Financial Markets and Institutions (co-edited with Jeremy Atack, 2009) both by Cambridge University Press.

Jaime Reis is a Senior Research Fellow at the Instituto de Ciências Sociais of the University of Lisbon. He holds a DPhil in History from the University of Oxford and has taught at the Universities of Vanderbilt, Leicester, Glasgow, and Nova de Lisboa and the European University Institute (Florence). He is a former president of the European Historical Economics Society and currently an editor of the European Review of Economic History. He is a member of the Lisbon Academy of Sciences and has published on the history of money and banking, human capital, labor, agriculture, and institutions, both in Europe and in Latin America. His latest publication is (with Stefano Battilossi) Financial Systems and the State in Europe and the United States: Historical Perspectives on Regulation in the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries (London: Ashgate, 2010).

Tirthankar Roy is on the faculty of the London School of Economics and a historian of South Asia. He is the author of The Economic History of India, 1857–1947 (Oxford University Press) and Traditional Industry in the Economy of Colonial India (Cambridge University Press). His current work addresses issues in the economic history of eighteenth-century India, including state formation, institutional change, and standards of living.

Jérôme Sgard holds a PhD in Economics from University of Paris-X-Nanterre and is currently a senior research fellow at Sciences Po (Centre d'Etudes et de Recherches Internationales) and an associate professor at the University of Paris-Dauphine. His early research work dealt with economic and institutional reforms in transition and emerging economies, and he is the author of L'Economie de la Panique (2002), a book on the Asian and Russian financial crisis. His more recent works focus on the long-term history of economic institutions, namely, commercial law and jurisdictions, with a specific interest in bankruptcy procedures.

Anand V. Swamy is Professor of Economics at Williams College in Williamstown, Massachusetts. His research focuses on institutional issues in colonial India. Recent publications include “Only Twice as Much: A Rule for Regulating Lenders” (joint with Mandar Oak) in Economic Development and Cultural Change, and “Contracts, Hold-Up and Exports: Textiles and Opium in Colonial India” (joint with Rachel Kranton) in the American Economic Review.

Jan Luiten van Zanden is Professor of Global Economic History at Utrecht University (and president of the International Economic History Association). He has published widely about long-term economic change in Western Europe and Asia (in particular, Indonesia). Among his recent books are The Long Road to the Industrial Revolution: The European Economy in a Global Perspective (2009) and, with Daan Marks, From Asian Drama to Growth Miracle: The Indonesian Economy, 1800–2010 (to be published in 2011).

Harriet T. Zurndorfer is Senior Research Scholar at the Faculty of Humanities, Leiden University, where she has taught since 1978. She is the author of Change and Continuity in Chinese Local History: The Development of Huizhou Prefecture, 800–1800 (1989) and China Bibliography: A Guide to Reference Works about China in the Past and Present (1995); and editor of the compilation Chinese Women in the Imperial Past (1999). From 1991 to 2000 she was the editor-in-chief of the Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient; she is also founder and editor of the journal Nan Nü: Men, Women and Gender in China, published since 1999.