

CONTRIBUTORS

Stefan Svallfors is a professor in sociology and Baltic Scholar at Umeå University. His current research mainly concerns attitudes to welfare policies and redistribution in Western countries. He is involved in several major attitude research programs: the International Social Survey Program, the European Social Survey, and the Swedish Welfare State Surveys. Among his publications, we find three previous volumes at Stanford University Press: Analyzing Inequality (2005), The Moral Economy of Class (2006), and The Political Sociology of the Welfare State (2007).

Helena Blomberg is a professor of social policy at the Swedish School of Social Science, University of Helsinki. She is chairing the theme group The Value Systems and Legitimacy in the Nordic Welfare State Model, within the Nordic Centre of Excellence: The Nordic Welfare State—Historical Foundations and Future Challenges. Her major fields of research concern popular and street-level bureaucrats' attitudes toward welfare policies in a comparative perspective and policy changes in the welfare state.

Clem Brooks is James H. Rudy Professor of Sociology at Indiana University Bloomington. His research is on voter choice, attitude formation, and comparative public policy. Current projects include a study of the U.S. public's responses to the 2008 economic crisis and survey experiments into attitude formation on counterterrorism policy and health policy. Among Brooks's publications are Social Cleavages and Political Change (1999), Why Welfare States Persist (2007), and a new manuscript, Whose Rights? (2012).

Johanna Kallio is a postdoctoral researcher in social policy and social work at the Swedish School of Social Science, University of Helsinki. Her main research areas are social policy attitudes and social perceptions among citizens, municipal decision makers, and street-level bureaucrats.

Olli Kangas is a research professor at the Social Insurance Institution of Finland. He specializes in comparative welfare studies, including analyses of the institutional setups of welfare programs, the political and structural factors behind the development of welfare states, and the consequences of social policy in terms of income distribution, poverty, legitimacy, and collective action. His papers have appeared in many leading social policy journals.

Christian Kroll is a senior lecturer in social policy at the Swedish School of Social Science, University of Helsinki. His current research focuses on the legitimization and legitimacy of welfare state reforms and on attitude formation among high-risk groups and welfare state professionals in comparative perspective.

Joakim Kulin is a postdoctoral researcher at the Department of Sociology at Umeå University. In his Ph.D. thesis “Values and Welfare State Attitudes,” he analyzes the relationship between human values and attitudes toward welfare state redistributive policies and how macro-level factors moderate this relationship across national contexts.

Tiina Likki is a Ph.D. candidate in social psychology at the University of Lausanne. Her research interests lie in political attitudes, redistribution, and power relations between dominant and subordinate groups. Her earlier research at the University of Helsinki focused on adaptation of immigrants.

Steffen Mau is a professor of political sociology and comparative social research at the University of Bremen. His main research areas include comparative welfare state research, social inequality, European integration, and transnationalism. He is the author of The Moral Economy of Welfare States—Britain and Germany Compared (2003), Social Transnationalism—Lifeworlds Beyond the Nation-State (2010), and European Societies—Mapping Structure and Change (2010; with Roland Verwiebe).

Bart Meuleman is an assistant professor at the Centre for Sociological Research, University of Leuven. His research mainly focuses on cross-national comparisons of attitude and value patterns, such as welfare state legitimacy, anti-immigrant sentiment, religious involvement, and basic human values. He has a special interest in research methodology for comparative research and comparability of survey measurements.

Jan Mewes is currently COFAS Marie Curie Fellow at Umeå University. From 2005 to 2011, he was researcher with the Chair of Political Sociology and Comparative Analysis of Contemporary Societies at the University of Bremen. His main research interests include migration, social stratification, public attitudes, social capital, and comparative welfare state research. He is the author of Ungleiche Netzwerke—Vernetzte Ungleichheit (2010).

Mikko Niemelä is a senior researcher at the Social Insurance Institution of Finland and a professor in social and health policy at the University of Tampere. His current research focuses on mechanisms of institutional change of welfare states, public perceptions of the causes of poverty, and cross-national differences in public attitudes toward the role of government.

Wim van Oorschot is a professor of sociology at Tilburg University. He is an honorary president of the Network for European Social Policy Analysis, initiator and director of the European Data Centre for Work and Welfare, and Honorary Professor at the Centre for Comparative Welfare Research of Aalborg University. His research and teaching regard the sociological and cultural analysis of welfare states and social policy. Previous books include Culture and Welfare State: Values and Social Policies in Comparative Perspective (Edward Elgar) and Disability Policies in European Countries (Kluwer).

Régis Scheidegger is a doctor in social sciences from Lausanne University. His current research concerns political attitudes, ideologies, and social representations as a function of academic socialization. He is involved in research on the link between subjective political competence and social representations of the social order.

Annette Schnabel is an associate professor in sociology at Umeå University. Her research interests cover the questions of why people join social movements; how they form their national, religious, and gender identities; and how emotions and rational choices interact. The impact of political and social institutions and their formation form another focal point of interest. The research on these issues encompasses empirical analyses, as well as their impact on social theory. Recent books include Emergenz (with Jens Greve; Frankfurt a.M.: Suhrkamp, 2010).

Christian Staerklé is an associate professor of social psychology at the University of Lausanne and a docent of social psychology at the University of Helsinki. His research is based on both survey and experimental methods and concerns political attitudes, intergroup relationships, and issues of social justice from the perspective of social representations theory. His papers have appeared in major social psychology journals.