

Contributors

Benjamin J. Cohen is Louis G. Lancaster Professor of International Political Economy at the University of California, Santa Barbara. He has held positions at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, Princeton University, and the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy. His research focuses on international monetary and financial relations. His recent books include International Political Economy: An Intellectual History and Global Monetary Governance.

Danielle F. S. Cohen is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Government at Cornell University. Her research interests include East Asian strategic relations, Sino-Japanese relations, and international political economy.

M. Taylor Fravel is an associate professor of political science and member of the Security Studies Program at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. His research focuses on international relations, with a particular emphasis on international security, China, and East Asia. He is the author of Strong Borders, Secure Nation: Cooperation and Conflict in China's Territorial Disputes.

Avery Goldstein is David M. Knott Professor of Global Politics and International Relations, professor of political science, director of the Center for the Study of Contemporary China, and associate director of the Christopher H. Browne Center for International Politics at the University of Pennsylvania, as well as a senior fellow at the Foreign Policy Research Institute in Philadelphia. He specializes in international relations, security studies, and Chinese politics. His publications include Rising to the Challenge: China's Grand Strategy and International Security; Deterrence and Security in the 21st Century: China, Britain, France and the Enduring Legacy of the Nuclear Revolution; and From Bandwagon to Balance of Power Politics: Structural Constraints and Politics in China, 1949–1978.

Michael C. Horowitz is an associate professor of political science at the University of Pennsylvania. His research interests include the intersection of religion and international relations, the role of leaders in international politics, and international security issues in East Asia. His publications include The Spread of Military Power: Causes and Consequences for International Politics.

Miles Kahler is Rohr Professor of Pacific International Relations at the School of International Relations and Pacific Studies and professor of political science at the University of California, San Diego. His research interests include international institutions and global governance, the evolution of the nation-state, multilateral strategies toward failed states, and the political economy of international finance. Among his recent publications are Territoriality and Conflict in an Era of Globalization and Governance in a Global Economy.

Jonathan Kirshner is a professor of government and director of the Reppy Institute for Peace and Conflict Studies, as well as coeditor of the book series Cornell Studies in Money. His research focuses on the political economy of national security and the politics of money. His recent publications include Appeasing Bankers: Financial Caution on the Road to War and The Future of the Dollar.

Edward D. Mansfield is Hum Rosen Professor of Political Science, chair of the Department of Political Science, and director of the Christopher H. Browne Center for International Politics at the University of Pennsylvania. His research focuses on international relations, international political economy, and international security. His publications include Power, Trade, and War; Electing to Fight: Why Emerging Democracies Go to War (with Jack Snyder); and Votes, Vetoes, and the Political Economy of International Trade Agreements (with Helen V. Milner).

Wu Xinbo is a professor, deputy director of the Center for American Studies, and associate dean for the School of International Relations and Public Affairs at Fudan University. His research interests include China's foreign and security policy, Sino-U.S. relations, and Asia-Pacific politics and security. He has published widely in both Chinese- and English-language journals and edited volumes, and he has been a visiting fellow at Stanford University's Asia-Pacific Research Center, the Henry Stimson Center, and the Brookings Institution in Washington, DC.

Yuan Peng is the director of the Institute of American Studies at the China Institutes of Contemporary International Relations. He conducts research on U.S. foreign policy, Sino-American relations, cross-strait relations, and East Asian and Pacific security studies. His latest books include China-U.S. Relations: A Strategic Analysis and American Think Tanks and Their Attitudes Towards China. Yuan was a visiting scholar at the Atlantic Council and a senior fellow at the Center for Northeast Asian Policy Studies of the Brookings Institution.

Zhang Tuosheng is the director of the Department of Research and a senior fellow at the China Foundation for International and Strategic Studies. Formerly an officer in the People's Liberation Army, Zhang was posted to the United Kingdom in the early 1990s as the deputy defense attaché. His main research interests are Sino-American relations, Sino-Japanese relations, Asia-Pacific security, and Chinese foreign policy.