

Notes on Contributors

Robert H. Donaldson is Trustees Professor of Political Science at the University of Tulsa, where he was president from 1990 to 1996. Previously, he was president of Fairleigh Dickinson University; provost of Lehman College of the City University of New York; and a professor and associate dean at Vanderbilt University. He is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and was a Council International Affairs Fellow from 1973–1974, serving as a consultant with the U.S. Department of State; he was also a visiting research professor at the Strategic Studies Institute, U.S. Army War College from 1978–1979. He is author or coauthor of six books and more than two dozen articles and book chapters, primarily on the politics and foreign policy of the USSR and Russia; his most recent book is The Foreign Policy of Russia: Changing Systems, Enduring Interests, 4th ed., 2009.

Andrew M. Dorman is a Professor of International Security at King's College London and an Associate Fellow of the International Security Programme at the Royal Institute of International Affairs, Chatham House. His research focuses on decision-making and the utility of force, utilizing the case studies of British defense and security policy and European Security. His recent books include coediting (with Joyce Kaufman) The Future of Transatlantic Relations: Perceptions, Policy and Practice, (Palo Alto, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 2011); Blair's Successful War: British Military Intervention in Sierra Leone (Farnham, UK: Ashgate, 2009). He originally trained as a chartered accountant with the professional company KPMG, qualifying in 1990 before returning to academia. He has previously taught at the University of Birmingham, where he completed his masters and doctoral degrees and the Royal Naval College Greenwich.

Jon Hill is a Senior Lecturer in the Defence Studies Department at King's College London, UK. He has published widely on issues of African security. His main publications include Nigeria Since Independence: Forever Fragile?; Identity in Algerian Politics: The Legacy of Colonial Rule; Remembering the War of Liberation: Legitimacy and Conflict in Contemporary Algeria; Sufism in Northern Nigeria: A Force for Counter-Radicalisation?; Islamism and Democracy in the Modern Maghreb; Corruption in the Courts: The Achilles Heel of Nigeria's Regulatory Framework?; and Thoughts of Home: Civil-Military Relations and the Conduct of Nigeria's Peacekeeping Forces.

Chris Hughes is Professor of International Politics and Japanese Studies, chair of the Department of Politics and International Studies, and chair of the Faculty of Social Sciences at the University of Warwick, UK. He was formerly research associate at the University of Hiroshima; Asahi Shimbun visiting professor of mass media and politics, University of Tokyo; and Edwin O. Reischauer visiting professor of Japanese studies, Department of Government, Harvard University. He holds adjunct positions at Hiroshima, Waseda, and Harvard universities. His most recent publications include Japan's Remilitarisation (Routledge, 2009), and Japan's Reemergence as a "Normal" Military Power (Oxford University Press, 2004). He is currently president of the British Association of Japanese Studies and joint editor of The Pacific Review.

Joyce P. Kaufman is a Professor of Political Science and Director of the Center for Engagement with Communities at Whittier College. She is the author of Introduction to International Relations (2013), A Concise History of U.S. Foreign Policy, 2nd ed. (2010), and NATO and the Former Yugoslavia: Crisis, Conflict and the Atlantic Alliance (2002) and coeditor of The Future of Transatlantic Relations: Perceptions, Policy and Practice (with Andrew M. Dorman) (2011). She is also the author of numerous articles and papers on U.S. foreign and security policy. With Kristen Williams, she is coauthor of Challenging Gender Norms: Women and Political Activism in Times of Crisis (2013), Women and War: Gender Identity and Activism in Times of Conflict (2010), and Women, the State, and War: A Comparative Perspective on Citizenship and Nationalism (2007).

Maryanne Kelton is a Senior Lecturer in international relations with the School of International Studies and deputy director of the Centre for United States and Asia Policy Studies at Flinders University. Her research interests concern the Australia–U.S. relationship, Australian foreign policy, defense procurement, and economic statecraft. She is author of “More than an Ally”? Contemporary Australia-US Relations (Ashgate, 2008) and New Depths: The Collins Class Submarine Project (ANU, 2005). She was also coauthor of the post-conflict transition simulation for the International Peace and Security Institute’s The Hague Symposium in 2012. Among other scholarly papers and book chapters, she has also published in the International Relations of the Asia-Pacific, Australian Journal of International Affairs, and Australian Journal of Politics and History.

Gale A. Mattox is a Professor of Political Science, U.S. Naval Academy; recipient of USNA Superintendent’s Civilian Faculty Service Award; adjunct professor, Graduate Security Studies, Georgetown University; chair, International Security & Arms Control Section, APSA; visiting senior scholar for Foreign/Domestic Policies, AICGS, Johns Hopkins University, and 2009 Distinguished Fulbright-Dow Research Chair, Roosevelt Center, The Netherlands. She served on the U.S. Department of State Policy Planning Staff and in Office Strategic and Theater Nuclear Policy; was International Affairs Analyst, Congressional Research Service; president, Women in International Security (WIIS), Georgetown University, and vice president, International Studies Association. She is on the boards of George Marshall Center, Germany; American Friends of the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation; and Forum for Security Studies, Swedish National Defense University. Recent publications include “Tactical Nuclear Weapons in Europe,” Arms Control History, Theory, and Policy (2012), Williams/Viotti (eds.); “Resetting the U.S.–Russian Relationship: Is ‘Cooperative Engagement’ Possible?,” European Security (2011); “Germany: From Civilian Power to International Actor,” The Future of Transatlantic Relations (2011), Dorman/Kaufman (eds.), Stanford University Press.

Patrick M. Morgan is a Professor of Political Science and holds the Tierney Chair in Global Peace and Conflict Studies at the University of California, Irvine. He is a founding and board member of the Council on U.S.–Korean Security Studies. His specialties are national and international security, U.S. security relations with Northeast Asia, and deterrence theory. His latest book (coedited) is Complex Deterrence (University of Chicago Press, 2009), and his current research project is the evolution of the American alliance system since the Cold War.

Harsh V. Pant is a Reader in International Relations in the Defence Studies Department at King's College London. He is also an Associate at the Centre for Science and Security Studies and the India Institute at King's College London. He is also an adjunct fellow with the Wadhvani Chair in U.S.–India Policy Studies at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, Washington, D.C. He has been a visiting professor at the Indian Institute of Management, Bangalore; a visiting fellow at the Center for the Advanced Study of India, University of Pennsylvania; and a visiting scholar at the Center for International Peace and Security Studies, McGill University. He is presently an Emerging Leaders Fellow at the Australia-India Institute, University of Melbourne. His current research is focused on Asian security issues. His most recent books include The China Syndrome (HarperCollins, 2010), The US-India Nuclear Pact: Policy, Process and Great Power Politics (Oxford University Press, 2011), and The Rise of China: Implications for India (Cambridge University Press, 2012).

Bill Park is a Senior Lecturer in the Department of Defence Studies, King's College London. He has written journal articles, book chapters, and monographs on a range of Turkish foreign policy issues, including its EU accession prospects, Turkey and ESDP, policies toward Northern Iraq, Turkey–U.S. relations, the Fethullah Gulen movement, and the Ergenekon affair. In 2011, Routledge published his book on Turkish foreign policy and globalization, and he is currently working on a project on Turkey's relationship with the Kurdish regional government in northern Iraq. He has appeared as a Turkey expert on various media in the UK, Turkey, and Australia and is occasionally used as a consultant on Turkish issues by various UK government agencies.

David Rudd is a senior defense scientist with the Centre for Operational Research and Analysis (CORA) at the Department of National Defence in Ottawa. He is currently attached to the strategic analysis team in the office of the Associate Deputy Minister (Policy). His previous postings include the Canadian Forces' Operational Support Command, the Chief of Force Development's Directorate of Future Security Analysis, and the Royal Canadian Navy's Directorate of Maritime Strategy. His specialties include NATO and Canadian military transformation, NATO-EU relations, Arctic security, and the transformation of allied navies. Mr. Rudd contributed a chapter on Canada to the Stanford Security Series volume, The Future of Transatlantic Relations: Perceptions, Policy, and Practice (2011).

Adrian Treacher is a Lecturer in the Department of Politics and Contemporary European Studies. Following six and a half years of postgraduate, doctoral, and postdoctoral study at the University of Birmingham (UK), Adrian Treacher has spent the last ten and a half years at the University of Sussex's prestigious Sussex European Institute. In addition to researching European security and EU external relations, he has also focused on French foreign policy with articles for International Peacekeeping and European Security, among others. He is also the author of French Interventionism: Europe's Last Global Player? (Ashgate, 2003).

Kathleen (Kate) Walsh is an Associate Professor of National Security Affairs at the U.S. Naval War College and affiliate of the China Maritime Studies Institute (CMSI). Her research focuses on China and the Asia-Pacific region, particularly security and technology issues. Her numerous publications include "Chinese Peacekeeping in the Asia Pacific: A Case Study on East Timor," coauthored with Lyle Goldstein, in CMSI Red Book 9 (2012); "Enhanced Information Sharing in the Asia Pacific: Establishing a Regional Cooperative Maritime Operations Center," in Strategic Manoeuvres: Security in the Asia-Pacific, James Veitch, ed. (2009); and Foreign High-Tech R&D in China: Risks, Rewards, and Implications for U.S.–China Relations (2003). Walsh is a member of the National Committee on U.S.–China Relations and the U.S. Council on Security Cooperation in the Asia Pacific (CSCAP). She has an M.A. from Columbia University and a B.A. from George Washington University.