

Acknowledgments

This study is based on my doctoral dissertation and I would like to thank a number of organizations for providing financial assistance toward the research. The University of Melbourne funded my doctoral candidacy through an Australian Postgraduate Research Award and supported two research visits to China under their visiting scholar programs with Beijing University and the Chinese University of Politics and Law. I am grateful to the Australian Vice Chancellors Association for providing a substantial grant toward my research in China through their Australian Awards for Research in Asia scheme. Many thanks also to the Department of Political Science at the University of Melbourne for travel grants and other support through my years of doctoral study. Staff and scholars at Beijing University and the Chinese University of Politics and Law offered valuable assistance during my various field trips to China, and the Contemporary China Center at the Australian National University were kind enough to fund several weeks of research at the center. Finally, I must thank the Faculty of Oriental Studies at Cambridge University for funding my most recent visit to China to gather additional research materials, for a publishing grant, and for providing the time and space to complete the revisions.

The personal debts accrued during the research and writing of this book have been many. I would particularly like to express my thanks to the following friends and colleagues: my doctoral supervisor, Michael Dutton, for his years of support, encouragement, and friendship, without whose inspiration I would never have pursued postgraduate study; my unofficial “doctoral committee,” Elaine Jeffreys, Kaz Ross, and David Stokes, for the hours they spent reading my work, for their criticisms, suggestions, insights, and comradeship; Graham Marsh and Beno Engles at the Department of Social Science, RMIT, for giving me my first teaching job; Bruce Jacobs and Gloria Davies at the Department of Asian Languages and Studies, Monash University, for employing me and providing crucial support over the latter stages of the doctorate; and David McMullen, Professor of Chinese Studies at Cambridge University, for his support over the last four years. I would also like to thank Chris Buckley, Peter Micic, Xu Zhangrun, Xu Ping, Liu Guang'an, Zhang Jie, Wang Fenyu, Liang Kun, Jon Unger, Gu Zhiming, Serena Lillywhite, Pan Yi, Zhu Yong, Chang Xinxin, Zhang Wei, Lou Jianbo, Roel Sterckx, Stephen Fagg, Clive of Economics, the "good bunch o' lads" at Wolfson, all my students, and many others who have generously assisted, encouraged, and kept me sane over the years.

I am very grateful to Muriel Bell at Stanford for her interest in my work and to Carmen Borbón-Wu, Tony Hicks, and Mary Ray Worley for their assistance through the publishing process. Stanford's two anonymous reviewers did a wonderful job in identifying errors, offering sound advice on amendments, and generally sharing their wisdom. I am very appreciative of their contribution to the final product. Naturally I take full responsibility for the views expressed and for any errors or omissions within the text.

I owe a special debt of gratitude to "Madame Mao" for her tireless devotion to the task of keeping my knees warm over many long winters of research and writing in Melbourne, and to "Harriet the Spy" for similar devotions in Cambridge. Heartfelt thanks to my parents, Kevin and Gwenyth Bray, and my sister, Jennifer Crone, for their unconditional support over the years. Most of all, I thank my partner, Louise Freckelton, whose love, support, encouragement, faith, wisdom, and bush-sense have made all the difference.