

Acknowledgments

---

This book would have been impossible without the support and encouragement of a number of colleagues at the University of California at Berkeley. When the idea of holding a conference on Chinese law to highlight the research of young social scientists who had recently returned from the field was mentioned to him, Professor Robert Kagan of the Center for the Study of Law and Society immediately came forward with an offer of financial assistance. Professors T. J. Pempel, Chair of the Institute of East Asian Studies, and Liu Xin, Chair of the Center for Chinese Studies, were equally generous when we turned to them for aid. Shortly thereafter, John Dwyer, then Dean of the School of Law (Boalt Hall) offered us staff support and a venue that provided a pleasant setting for what turned out to be a very lively exchange of views. And, finally, the clocklike unfolding of events on that warm weekend in September 2002 hinged (as always) on the hard work and professionalism of the staff members who helped organize the conference, most notably, John Groschwitz (Institute of East Asian Studies), Joan Kask (Institute of East Asian Studies), Melissa Martin (Boalt Hall), and Rod Watanabe (Center for the Study of Law and Society).

We, and the chapter writers, also benefited immeasurably from the advice of the three discussants who joined us at the conference: William Alford, Stinson Professor of Law at the Harvard Law School; Marc Galanter, Professor of Law at the University of Wisconsin; and Robert Kagan, Professor of Political Science at the University of California. Each brought his own experiences, disciplinary knowledge, and practiced eye for cant and ambiguity to the task of reading and commenting on the papers.

Finally, we wish to thank Muriel Bell, acquisitions editor for Asian studies at Stanford University Press, for attending the Berkeley conference and for ushering our volume toward publication. Muriel has played a role second to none in making scholarship on Chinese law better known, and we are delighted to be the latest beneficiaries of her work.

NEIL J. DIAMANT, STANLEY B. LUBMAN, KEVIN J. O'BRIEN