

Acknowledgments

Research for this book was undertaken with the support of a Large Grant from the Australian Research Council and was in other ways supported by the College of Fine Arts, University of New South Wales.

A short version of Chapter 2 was published as “The Aesthetics of Sense Memory: Theorising Trauma Through the Visual Arts,” in Trauma und Erinnerung, ed. Franz Kaltenbeck and Peter Weibel (Vienna: Passagen Verlag, 2000), and in Regimes of Memory, ed. Susannah Radstone and Katharine Hodgkin (London: Routledge, 2003). A section of Chapter 3 was published as “Art, Affect and the Bad Death,” Signs 28, no. 1 (Autumn 2002): © 2002 by the University of Chicago. All rights reserved.

The excerpt from Karen Finley’s Constant State of Desire is reprinted by permission of City Lights Books © 1990 Karen Finley, and the text of Willie Doherty’s The Only Good One Is a Dead One courtesy of Alexander and Bonin, New York, and Matt’s Gallery, London.

I am grateful to many friends and colleagues for discussions that have contributed to this book. Above all, I thank David McNeill for sharing his best ideas and worst jokes.

I thank many generous hosts in South Africa for their hospitality, guidance and conversation—in particular, Yazir Henri, Heidi Grunebaum, Nkululeku Booysen, and the Direct Action Centre for Peace, Cape Town; William Kentridge, Anne Stanwix, Anne McIlleron, Jane Taylor, Rayda Becker, Fiona Rankin-Smith, Gavin Younge, and Glenda Younge.

I am grateful to Ian McLean, Gordon Bennett and Leanne Bennett who read and offered useful comment on Chapter 6, and to all the other artists who were willing to talk about and provide information on their work.

Many colleagues in Sydney and around the world have advanced theoretical thinking on affect in art and helped my work; in particular, it has been a joy to work with Jennifer Biddle, Anna Munster, and the organizers the 2001 Art Association “Affect and Sensation” conference. I am also indebted to the work of Ernst van Alphen and Marianne Hirsch—both warm, generous colleagues.

I thank Mieke Bal for her enthusiastic support and for the opportunity to publish in this series, Donna Brett for her calm efficiency and help with the manuscript, and Peter Dreyer for his excellent copyediting.

This book is dedicated to the memory of my father, who could only dream of the opportunities I have had, and to my inspiring children—Luc and Lita—in the hope that no obstacle will ever prove too big for you!
