

Contributors

BEN AGGER teaches in the Department of Sociology at the University of Texas at Arlington, where he also directs the Center for Theory. He writes in the areas of critical theory, cultural studies, and media/Internet studies. Among his recent books are Postponing the Postmodern (Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield, 2002); The Virtual Self (Malden, MA: Blackwell, 2004); and Speeding Up Fast Capitalism (Boulder, CO: Paradigm, 2004). He is working on a book on the 1960s (The Sixties at Forty) and, with Beth Anne Shelton, a book on the family and childhood (Fast Families, Virtual Children). He also edits the journal Fast Capitalism (www.fastcapitalism.com).

MIKE CRANG is a reader in geography at Durham University. Since he obtained his doctorate, he has worked on issues of temporality and social memory and is interested in the conceptual and empirical relationships of space and time. He has been the coeditor of the journal Time & Society since 1997 and has written several papers and essays on space and time (putting together an edited collection, Thinking Space [London: Routledge, 2000], with Nigel Thrift). He has also worked on urban information and communication technologies, publishing several papers and an edited collection (Virtual Geographies [London: Routledge, 1999], with Phil Crang and Jon May). He has recently been working on an ESRC-funded project, "Multispeed cities and the logistics of daily life in an information age,” and previously on a British Academy project on Singapore as an Intelligent Island.

ROBERT HASSAN is an Australian Research Council Senior Fellow in media and communications at the Media and Communications Program at the University of Melbourne. He has written numerous articles on the subjects of information technology and time. His books include The Chronoscopic Society (New York: Lang, 2003); Media, Politics, and the Network Society (Maidenhead: Open University Press, 2004); The New Media in Theory Reader (with Julian Thomas) (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2006); and Empire of Speed (in press). He is currently writing The Political Economy of Information. With Carmen Leccardi, he is editor of Time & Society.

THOMAS HYLLAND ERIKSEN is Professor of Social Anthropology at the University of Oslo and at the Free University of Amsterdam. He is formerly a Senior Research Fellow at the International Institute of Peace Research and has served as editor of the cultural journal Samtiden (Our Times); the book series Anthropology, Culture, and Society (Pluto Press); and the Norwegian Journal of Anthropology. He has published numerous books, including Tyranny of the Moment: Fast and Slow Time in the Information Age (London: Pluto, 2001); Ethnicity and Nationalism (London: Pluto, 1993/2002); and Engaging Anthropology: The Case for a Public Presence (Oxford: Berg, 2006). His academic writings span such topics as ethnicity, identity politics, nationalism, anthropological theory, and minority issues. He has also written about evolution and selfishness and is currently writing a book on globalization and one on rubbish.

CARMEN LECCARDI is Professor of Cultural Sociology at the University of Milan-Bicocca, Italy. She has published widely on the topics of time, youth, and gender and has a special interest in the issue of the future and planning in a risk society. During 2000 and 2001 she was one of a small group of youth-research experts whom the European Commission asked to take part in its White Paper consultation process, developing a strategy for young people across Europe. A former member of the Council of the International Society for the Study of Time, since 1999 she has been coeditor of the journal Time & Society. Her latest books include Il tempo nella società (Time in Society) (Milan: Baldini Castoldi Dalai, 2006); and A New Youth? Young People, Generations, and Family Life (coedited with Elisabetta Ruspini) (Aldershot: Ashgate, 2006).

GEERT LOVINK is a media theorist, net critic, and author of Dark Fiber (Cambridge, MA: MIT Press, 2002); Uncanny Networks (Cambridge, MA: MIT Press, 2002); and My First Recession (Rotterdam: V2/NAi, 2003). He is a member of the Adilkno collective (Cracking the Movement, The Media Archive) and cofounder of Internet projects such as The Digital City, Nettime, Fibreculture, and Incommunicado. He holds a PhD from the University of Melbourne and in 2003 was postdoc at the Centre for Critical and Cultural Studies, University of Queensland. In 2004 he founded the Institute of Network Cultures as a part of his newly created job in Amsterdam as professor at Interactive Media (Hogeschool van Amsterdam) and associate professor in the Media and Culture Department, University of Amsterdam. From 2005 to 2006 he was a fellow at the Wissenschaftskolleg, the Berlin Institute for Advanced Study. Web archive: www.laudanum.net/geert. Blog: www.networkcultures.org/geert.

DAVID R. LOY is Besl Professor of Religion, Ethics, and Society at Xavier University in Cincinnati. His books include Nonduality: A Study in Comparative Philosophy (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1988); Lack and Transcendence: The Problem of Death and Life in Psychotherapy, Existentialism, and Buddhism (Atlantic Highlands, NJ: Humanities Press, 1996); A Buddhist History of the West: Studies in Lack (Albany: State University of New York Press, 2002); and The Great Awakening: A Buddhist Social Theory (Boston: Wisdom, 2003). He is a longtime student of Zen and is qualified as a Zen sensei (teacher) in the Sanbo Kyodan lineage.

ADRIAN MACKENZIE teaches at the Institute for Cultural Research, Lancaster University. His research is in the area of technology, science, and culture using approaches from cultural studies, social studies of technology, and critical theory. He has published several monographs on technology, including Transductions: Bodies and Machines at Speed (London: Continuum, 2002); and Cutting Code: Software and Sociality (New York: Peter Lang, 2006); as well as a range of articles on technology, digital media, science, and culture.

ANDREW MURPHIE is a Senior Lecturer in the School of Media, Film, and Theatre, University of New South Wales, Australia. He has published on the work of Gilles Deleuze and Félix Guattari, cultural theory, virtual media, network ecologies, and popular music. He is the coauthor with John Potts of Culture and Technology (New York: Palgrave, 2003); and editor of the FibreCulture Journal (<http://journal.fibreculture.org/>). His current research focuses on the cultural politics of models of cognition, perception, and life; media ecologies; electronic music; and performance technologies. His recent online publications include "Differential Life, Perception and the Nervous Elements: Whitehead, Bergson, and Virno on the Technics of Living," in Culture Machine (2005); and "The Mutation of 'Cognition' and the Fracturing of Modernity: Cognitive Technics, Extended Mind, and Cultural Crisis," in Scan (2005).

JACK PETRANKER, MA University of California at Berkeley, JD Yale Law School, is founder and director of the Center for Creative Inquiry and the author of When It Rains, Does Space Get Wet? (Berkeley, CA: Dharma, 2006). A former dean of the Nyingma Institute in Berkeley, California, he teaches at the institute and offers programs and workshops on three continents. His research interests include first-person methodologies in consciousness studies, the lived significance of time and space, creative inquiry in the classroom, prospects for transforming the legal profession, and the new forms of human experience generated by technological knowledge. He is an active member of the California Bar.

RONALD E. PURSER is Professor of Management in the College of Business at San Francisco State University, past division chair of the Organization Development and Change (ODC) division of the Academy of Management, and cofounder of the International Network for Time in Management and Organizations (INTiMO). He has chaired symposia on time and organizations at the Academy of Management meetings and was guest editor of a special issue of the Journal of Managerial Psychology on "Timescapes in Management." Dr. Purser's articles on time have appeared in such outlets as the Journal of Applied Behavioral Science; Research in Organizational Change and Development; Making Time (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2002); and In Search of Time (Palermo: Fabio Orlando Editore, 2005). He is a member of the International Society for the Study of Time.

HANS RÄMÖ is Associate Professor in the School of Business at Stockholm University. His recent research interests include temporal and spatial factors of management and organization, project management, organizational trust, food industry, health care and environmental management, and philosophy and sociology of science. He has published a number of articles, including in the journal Time & Society, as well as book chapters.

IDA H. J. SABELIS is Assistant Professor in the Department of Culture, Organization, and Management at Free University in Amsterdam. Her research focuses on time in organizations, temporal compression and acceleration, and identity processes in contemporary organizational life. She is book review editor for Time & Society; associate editor of the serial Gender, Work, and Organization (Oxford: Blackwell, 1994–); editor for the Dutch journal Filosofie in Bedrijf (Philosophy of Organization); and is an active member of the Tutzing Time Ecology Project (Germany), INTiMO (International Network of Time Studies in Management and Organization), and the ISST (International Society for the Study of Time).

DARREN TOFTS is Associate Professor of Media and Communications, Swinburne University of Technology, Melbourne. He is the author (with artist Murray McKeich) of Memory Trade: A Prehistory of Cyberculture (Sydney: Interface Books, 1998); Parallax: Essays on Art, Culture, and Technology (Sydney: Interface Books, 1999); and editor (with Annemarie Jonson and Alessio Cavallaro) of Prefiguring Cyberculture: An Intellectual History (Sydney: Power Publications/MIT Press, 2003). His most recent book is Interzone: Media Arts in Australia (Melbourne: Thames and Hudson, 2005). He is a member of the editorial boards of Postmodern Culture, Continuum, fibreculture journal, Rhizomes, and RealTime.