

CONTRIBUTORS

Ana María Bejarano is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Toronto. She holds a Ph.D. in Political Science from Columbia University. She previously was Professor of Political Science at the Universidad de Los Andes in Bogotá, where she also served as Director of the Center for Social and Legal Research (CIJUS). She co-edited Elecciones y democracia en Colombia, 1997–1998 (Universidad de los Andes, Fundación Social, Veeduría Elección Presidencial, 1998), and co-authored the chapter on Colombia in Frances Hagopian and Scott Mainwaring, eds., The Third Wave of Democratization in Latin America: Advances and Setbacks (Cambridge University Press, 2005). Recent publications include articles in Constellations and the Canadian Journal of Latin American and Caribbean Studies. She is finishing a book on the historical origins and divergent trajectories of democracy in Colombia and Venezuela. Her current research deals with regime change, institution-building, and constitution-making in the Andes.

Brian F. Crisp received his Ph.D. from the University of Michigan and is currently an Associate Professor in the Department of Political Science at Washington University in St. Louis. His work on the institutional mechanisms constructed to formalize state–civil society relations and the impact of these relations on policy choices has appeared in the American Political Science Review, American Journal of Political Science, and Journal of Politics. His book, Democratic Institutional Design: The Powers and Incentives of Venezuelan Politicians and Interest Groups, was published by Stanford University Press (2000).

Daniel H. Levine is the James Orin Murfin Professor of Political Science at the University of Michigan. He has published extensively on issues of democracy, democratization, social movements, Venezuelan politics, and religion and politics in Latin America. His books include Conflict and Political Change in Venezuela (Princeton University Press, 1973), Religion and Politics in Latin America: The Catholic Church in Venezuela and Colombia (Princeton University Press, 1981), and Popular Voices in Latin American Catholicism (Princeton University Press, 1992).

Scott Mainwaring is Eugene Conley Professor of Political Science and Director of the Kellogg Institute for International Studies at the University of Notre Dame. His books include The Third Wave of Democratization in Latin America: Advances and Setbacks (Cambridge University Press, co-edited, 2005), Democratic Accountability in Latin America (Oxford University Press, co-edited, 2003), Christian Democracy in Latin America (Stanford University Press, co-edited, 2003), Rethinking Party Systems in the Third Wave of Democratization: The Case of Brazil (Stanford University Press, 1999), Presidentialism and Democracy in Latin America (Cambridge University Press, co-edited, 1997); Building Democratic Institutions: Party Systems in Latin America (Stanford University Press, co-edited, 1995), and many others. He received a John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation fellowship in 2000 for work on a project on authoritarianism and democracy in Latin America, 1945–2000.

René Antonio Mayorga is a Senior Researcher at the Centro Boliviano de Estudios Multidisciplinarios (CEBEM). He is also Professor of Political Science at the Facultad Latinoamericana de Ciencias Sociales (FLACSO) in Ecuador, and in the Joint Master's Program of CEBEM, FLACSO, and the Universidad Complutense of Madrid. He has been a visiting professor at Brown University and at the Universities of Salamanca, Berlin, and Notre Dame, among others. His books include De la anomia política al orden democrático (CEBEM, 1991); Antipolítica y neopopulismo (CEBEM, 1995); and La cuestión militar en cuestión: Democracia y fuerzas armadas (CEBEM, 1994). He is editor of Democracia y gobernabilidad en América Latina (ILDIS, CEBEM, 1992). He also contributed chapters to The Third Wave of Democratization in Latin America (Cambridge University Press, 2005), Transitional Justice and the Rule of Law in New Democracies (Notre Dame University Press, 1997), and Mixed-Member Electoral Systems: The Best of Both Worlds? (Oxford University Press, 2001).

Kathleen O'Neill is studying law at New York University. She received a Ph.D. in Political Economy and Government from Harvard in 1999, and she was an Assistant Professor of Government at Cornell University from 2000 to 2003.

Simón Pachano is a Researcher at FLACSO in Quito, Ecuador. He has also taught in Spain and Bolivia, and he has published extensively on Ecuadorian politics. Among his many publications are Democracia sin sociedad (ILDS, 1996) and La representación caótica: Análisis del sistema electoral ecuatoriano (FLACSO, 1998).

Eduardo Pizarro Leongómez is Professor at the Universidad Nacional de Colombia in Bogotá and served as Director of its Instituto de Estudios Políticos y Relaciones Internacionales (IEPRI). He was a Visiting Fellow at the Kellogg Institute for International Studies in 2000–2001. He has published several scholarly analyses of the conflict in Colombia, including Una democracia asediada: Balance y perspectivas del conflicto armado en Colombia (Editorial Norma, 2004), and he is a weekly contributor to the national newspaper, El Tiempo.

Catalina Romero is Professor of Sociology at the Department of Social Sciences and Dean of the Social Sciences at the Pontificia Universidad Católica del Perú. She obtained her Ph.D. at the New School for Social Research in 1989. She was Director of the Instituto Bartolomé de Las Casas in Lima from 1982 to 1992. She has published several articles and books about the Catholic Church, social movements, and civil society in Peru.

Martín Tanaka holds a Ph.D. in Political Science from the Facultad Latinoamericana de Ciencias Sociales (FLACSO) in Mexico City. He is Director of the Instituto de Estudios Peruanos in Lima. Tanaka has written about Peruvian politics, Latin American politics, and social movements and participation in Peru. He is author of Los espejismos de la democracia: El colapso del sistema de partidos en el Perú (Instituto de Estudios Peruanos, 1998). He contributed chapters to Frances Hagopian and Scott Mainwaring, eds., The Third Wave of Democratization in Latin America: Advances and Setbacks (Cambridge University Press, 2005), and to Carol Wise, Riordan Roett, and Guadalupe Paz, eds., Post-Stabilization Politics in Latin America (Brookings Institution Press, 2003).

Deborah J. Yashar is Associate Professor of Politics and International Affairs and Director of the Program in Latin American Studies at Princeton University. She is the author of Contesting Citizenship in Latin America: The Rise of Indigenous Movements and the Postliberal Challenge (Cambridge University Press, 2005) and Demanding Democracy: Reform and Reaction in Costa Rica and Guatemala, 1870s–1950s (Stanford University Press, 1997). Her current research focuses on the intersection of civil wars, reconstruction, and democratization, and on inequality.