

Acknowledgments

I have incurred many debts, personal and intellectual, large and small, during the process of writing this book. First, I must thank Carmen Diana Deere and Karen Spalding, who nurtured me and my work during many years of graduate school and since. Not only have they been exemplary intellectual inspirations, but also terrific models for being a humane and engaged scholar and teacher.

My institutional debts include the wonderful staff at the Archivo General de la Nación in Lima, particularly Yolanda Auqui Chávez and Alex Escobedo Hinostroza; Laura Gutiérrez Arbulú and the staff of the Archivo Arzobispal de Lima; Srta. Imelda Solano Galavetta of the Archivo Arzobispal de Trujillo; and most especially Director Napoleón Cieza Burga, Martha Chandavi Céspedes, Silvia Romero Benites, and the deeply missed Walter Arteaga Liñan, of the Archivo Regional de La Libertad in Trujillo. I was warmly welcomed at the Instituto Riva-Agüero and supported by my friends and colleagues Carlos Gálvez Peña, Ada Arrieto, and Renzo Honores. I was fortunate to receive the assistance of the late Dr. Franklin Pease G.Y. and Dr. José de la Puente Cándamo, both at the Pontificia Universidad Católica; and María Rostworowski and Carlos Contreras, of the Instituto de Estudios Peruanos, were generous with their time and resources.

In the United States, I found a lovely temporary home at the John Carter Brown Library in Providence, where I held a Ruth and Lincoln Ekstrom Fellowship in 1997. Not only did this provide me with a gorgeous setting and spectacular resources, but one of the most intriguing and provocative groups of colleagues imaginable. Many conversations with Susan Niles, David Murray, Rich Rath, and others colored the writing of this book.

I have received financial assistance for this project from many generous sources: the Fulbright Program funded my initial dissertation research in Peru (1995–96); the American Association of University Women funded much of the writing-up process through their American Fellowships (1996–97); later research trips were supported by a trio of Cornell University's academic resources: the President's Council on Cornell Women, the Society for the Humanities, and the History Department; as well as an Albert J. Beveridge Grant from the American Historical Association.

Many other friends and colleagues, in Peru and in the United States, have provided invaluable assistance through their friendship and scholarly conversations. Juan Castañeda Murga made Trujillo a fascinating and lively place for me, through his apparently boundless historical knowledge and wonderful outings to visit archaeological sites. In Trujillo, Rosalía and María Kemper and the Castro-Obando family all provided me with comfortable homes and ad hoc extended families. Béatrice Raboud González was an engaging housemate and friend, and I must give special thanks to the Távara family, particularly Pepe and Charo, for being my family abroad. A short list of those who vitally contributed to my intellectual development as this book was written includes Susana Aldana, Carollee Bengelsdorf, Michelle Bigenho, James K. Boyce, S. Charusheela, Colin Danby, Monisha Das Gupta, Dora Dumont, Tamara Loos, Teodoro Hampe Martínez, Jane Mangan, Susie Minchin, Karoline Noack, Rachel O'Toole, Susanne Pohl, Ana María Presta, Karen Powers, Rich Rath, and Nancy van Deusen. Stanford University Press chose two exceptional readers for my manuscript: Susan Ramírez and Kymm Gauderman provided constructive, informed, and supportive comments that helped me move toward the final stage. The manuscript also benefited from careful readings by Derek Chang, Marikay McCabe, and Kathryn Burns (multiple times!). I feel particularly fortunate in my affiliation with Stanford University Press. Norris Pope has been a model editor: efficient, straightforward, and just delightful to deal with.

Finally, I offer heartfelt thanks to my friends and family for putting up with my belated trip to graduate school and my constant to-and-fro across continents. My mother Sylvia and brother Barry have contributed material as well as emotional support. I am sorry that my father Hyman did not live to see this work, but his sense of humor certainly kept me sane through its writing. And most important of all, thanks to Mateo for showing me what really matters in life: cats, fans, water fountains. I am grateful that you will be able to accompany me on the adventures still to come.
