

Acknowledgments

The debts I incurred in the long process of writing this book are too numerous to list, and extend well beyond the intellectual plane. I acknowledge some of them here, however inadequately, with gladness.

This book began as a doctoral dissertation at Harvard Law School, where I had the benefit of extraordinary teaching and sensitive guidance. Were it not for Jerry Frug, who shepherded this project from before its inception, I probably would not have written a book. Bob Gordon and Duncan Kennedy were driving forces behind the research, and were it not for them it would have been a different book. Terry Fisher and Barbara Johnson were my guides into academia, and I could not have asked for better.

A number of friends and colleagues read parts of the manuscript, offering thought-provoking comments and invaluable editorial suggestions that improved the final product. While I cannot name them all, I am especially grateful to Eric Berlow, David Charny, Dick Craswell, Hanoeh Dagan, Kathy Eade, Michele Graziadei, Ted Janger, Tony Kronman, Assaf Likhovski, Rick Pildes, Anne-Marie Slaughter, Chris Tomlins, and Eyal Zamir. Yishai Blank, Sharon Hannes, and Shai Lavi are direct participants in the thought processes represented in this book; their contribution goes far beyond reading the manuscript.

Conversations with Mort Horwitz, Chris Desan, and Menny Mautner had formative effects on my thinking about American legal history and contracts. I have also enjoyed unflagging support at the Law Faculty at Tel Aviv University, for which I am most grateful to my colleagues, in particular Omri Yadlin and Ariel Porat.

I presented portions of the book and received helpful comments at faculty workshops at the University of Virginia School of Law; Hebrew University; Haifa University; the Interdisciplinary Center in Herzliya; Northwestern University Law School; the Legal History Workshop at Tel Aviv University; the Stanford Yale Junior Faculty Forum; and the Graduate Program Colloquium at Harvard Law School. Special thanks are due to Alison White, the Special Collections Librarian at the University of Virginia School of Law. The final stages of preparation of the manuscript were greatly aided by the excellent research assistance of Yael Anatot and Dan Ziv.

My deepest debt, which continues to grow daily, is to my family: parents, siblings, children, and most of all Michal. They do not always make writing easier, but their presence feeds the illusion that it might be worthwhile.

I am grateful for financial assistance from the Alon Fellowship of the Israel Council for Higher Education, the John Marshall Harlan Fellowship at New York Law School, the Mark DeWolfe Howe Fellowship Fund, the Byse Fellowship at Harvard Law School, and the TMR Network Project on "Common Principles of European Private Law."

An early version of Part One was previously published as "The Gift Beyond the Grave: Revisiting the Question of Consideration," 101 Columbia Law Review 1876 (2001); and a version of Part Two was published as "Speculations of Contract, or How Contract Law Stopped Worrying and Learned to Love Risk," 100 Columbia Law Review 1096 (2000).
