

Acknowledgments

This book would not have been possible without the love and support of my beautiful wife, Lori, to whom I owe my greatest thanks. I am indeed fortunate to be able to share my life with such an amazing woman, and not a day goes by that I do not recognize and appreciate how lucky I am.

My family has provided the foundation of support that I have continually depended on. Thanks to my mom, Doris, who has always done so much for me and for the rest of our family—often without adequate thanks and appreciation. My dad, Woldemar, was unwavering in his confidence in me and instilled in me a desire to always try to see the positive and that all things are possible. For that, I am thankful. I miss him dearly, but he is always with me in spirit. I'd also like to thank my “new” family, Elinor and Diane, who have always made me feel like a part of the family and have given much support and encouragement. I'm also lucky to have been able to get to know Milton Luster—albeit for too brief a time. To remember him always brings a smile.

Professionally, I owe a great many thanks to teachers, mentors, colleagues, and friends. Art Stein, Jim Hollifield, Martin Heisler, and David Rapoport have all been tremendous mentors to me over the years, offering both wise counsel and much needed encouragement. I also wish to thank Mia Bloom, Rey Koslowski, Deborah Larson, Nick Onuf, Richard Rosecrance, and Henry Yu. Thanks to Elsa Arismendi for her research assistance and work on the index, and to Alexandria Giardino for her meticulous copyediting. Thanks also to Amanda Moran, Jared Smith, and Mariana Raykov at Stanford University Press for all their help in seeing the manuscript through the publication process.

Over the past few years I have been fortunate to spend time in remarkable places of research and learning. I was lucky to engage a wide array of scholars and students and to have many opportunities to share ideas and gain needed feedback. For this, I thank Kevin Middlebrook and Wayne Cornelius (Center for U.S.-Mexican Studies and the Center for Comparative Immigration Studies at the University of California, San Diego), Ann Tickner (Center for International Studies at the University of Southern California), Steve Lamy (School of International Relations at USC), and Jeff Anderson (Center for German and European Studies at Georgetown University). My sincere thanks to the fantastic staff at each for all their help, including Graciela Platero, Melissa Ince, Marisela Schaffer, Calluna Euving, Allison Hillegeist, Kim Jaeger, and Barbara Kalabinski. I also thank Louis Goodman and the faculty at the School of International Service for bringing me to American University and for providing me with such a great place to continue my research and teaching.

Financial support for this project has been received from the UCLA graduate division, UCLA Department of Political Science, the Institute for the Study of World Politics (Washington, DC), the USC Center for International Studies, the Canadian Embassy in Washington, DC, and the School of International Studies at American University. A portion of Chapter 7 appeared as "Sovereignty and Territorial Borders in a Global Age," International Studies Review 7, no. 1 (2005): 1–20.

CWR
Alexandria, VA