

Acknowledgments

I have accumulated many debts, both personal and intellectual, in the time taken to write this book. My thanks to Sandy Levinson, Ruth O'Brien, Martha Fineman, Reva Siegel, Jordan Steiker, Vicki Schultz, Martha Minow, Kim Scheppele, Gerald Torres, and Zipporah Wiseman for teaching me about law. One of the works that first inspired me to think about constitutional law as a system for ordering social relations was Karen Orren's brilliant book Belated Feudalism, which remains, in my view, one of the greatest works in American politics published in the past twenty years.

Others have given me thoughtful input on the project as it has progressed. Among my colleagues at the University of Texas at Austin, I wish to thank Kamran Ali, Kit Belgum, Cathy Boone, David Braybrooke, Evan Carton, Michael Churgin, Jane Cohen, Ann Cvetkovich, Willy Forbath, Sue Heinzelman, John Higley, Juliet Hooker, Gary Jacobsohn, Allison Martens, Lisa Moore, Allison Perlman, H. W. Perry, Sharmila Rudruppa, Larry Sager, Sean Theriault, Gerald Torres, Jeff Tulis, Debra Umberson, Sarah Weddington, Kurt Weyland, and Jacqui Woolley, as well as Deans Bill Powers and Richard Lariviere. Beyond my home university, I would like to thank Eileen Boris, Michael Brown, John Coleman, Nancy Cott, Mary Dudziak, Martha Fineman, Michael Hanchard, Hendrick Hartog, Nancy Hirschmann, Mary Katzenstein, Ira Katznelson, Linda Kerber, Alice Kessler-Harris, Desmond King, Dan Kryder, Rob Lieberman, Eileen McDonagh, Uday Mehta, Suzanne Mettler, Carol Nackenoff, Anne Norton, Julie Novkov, Ruth O'Brien, Karen Orren, Ann Orloff, Carole Pateman, Virginia Sapiro, Clare Sheridan, Theda Skocpol, Reva Siegel, Rogers Smith, and Kathleen Sullivan.

Parts of this book have been presented as lectures at different universities.

The feedback I have gotten from those public presentations has done a great deal to sharpen my arguments. My thanks to the organizers and audiences members at the American Political Development Colloquium at the University of Wisconsin; the American Politics Workshop at Harvard University; the Center for History, Society, and Culture at the University of California, Davis; the Department of Political Science at UCLA; the Feminist Legal Theory Workshop at Cornell Law School and at Emory's Law School; the Fulbright Colloquium at the CUNY Graduate Center; the Government Department at Cornell University; the Human Rights Colloquium at the University of Texas Law School; the Institute for Women and Gender Studies at Columbia University; the Law and Public Affairs Program at Princeton University; the Miller Center at the University of Virginia; and the Twentieth Century American Politics and Society Workshop at Columbia University. I would also like to acknowledge the assistance I received from the National Endowment for the Humanities, which provided me with fellowship support in 2001. My thanks as well to the Public Policy Clinic at UT Austin and its former director, Dr. Gary Freeman, for support of this project.

I am blessed to have many smart and generous friends, who have put up with my musings and meanderings for a long time. A few deserve special mention. Among them are Christine Williams, a wonderful reader and committed feminist, who inspires me by her ability to live her politics. Katie Stewart has read many drafts and listened to many of my half-baked ideas. She always pulls out the best in what I am doing and encourages me to build upon it. Ruth O'Brien has given me the benefit of her formidable knowledge of law and theory, and has always encouraged me to reach for the prize. Debra Umberson has shown me that it is possible to be both a productive scholar and an effective administrator while still being there for your kids. Kit Belugum has reminded me of the joys of research and writing. Ann Cvetkovich has offered many thoughtful comments on my work, and the inspiration of someone who is willing to follow her muse. These wonderful friends have guided me through the journey of creating this book.

My family has provided inspiration, distraction, and support for this book. Sean Keel spent many hours entertaining our kids while I went into to my office to look over yet another set of court cases. As I traveled further into the realm of law, I came closer to the world of my father, David S. Ritter, who is a judge in New York State. My father has taught me many valuable lessons, including the importance of having work that you love. I would also like to thank my mother and her husband, Sandy and Warren DuBois, for their support and encouragement. My brothers and their families—Andy Ritter and Karen Ritter, Matt Ritter, and Alex and Tyler Ritter—offered me their love and good humor throughout. My friends and family members have sustained me with their kindness and patience. This book is dedicated to the memories of two people I have lost—my brother Karl Ritter, and my friend Lora Romero. Both were bright lights, and the world is a bit dimmer without them. The book is also dedicated to my children, Rose and Lukas, who animate my hopes for democracy, and who teach me every day that, as one radical feminist wrote, “love, justice, and equality are the solution.”
