

Contributors

Allen Carlson is assistant professor in Cornell University's Government Department. He is the author of Unifying China, Integrating with the World: Securing Chinese Sovereignty During the Reform Era (Stanford University Press, 2005). He also recently co-edited (with J. J. Suh and Peter Katzenstein) Rethinking Security in East Asia: Power, Identity and Efficiencies (Stanford University Press, 2004). In addition, he has published articles in the Journal of Contemporary China and Pacific Affairs.

Thomas J. Christensen is professor of politics and international affairs at Princeton University. He received his B.A. in history from Haverford College, M.A. in international relations from the University of Pennsylvania, and Ph.D. in political science from Columbia University. Before arriving at Princeton in 2003, he taught at Cornell University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Yong Deng is associate professor in political science at the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland. His scholarly works on Chinese foreign policy include two edited volumes, In the Eyes of the Dragon: China Views the World (co-editor, 1999) and China Rising: Power and Motivation in Chinese Foreign Policy (co-editor, 2005). He has also published in academic journals, including Political Science Quarterly, China Quarterly, and Pacific Affairs, as well as in several edited volumes.

John Garver is professor with the Sam Nunn School of International Affairs at Georgia Institute of Technology. His research specializes on Chinese foreign relations, and he has written many books and articles in that area. His most recent research has dealt with China-India and China-Iran relations. He has set up and directed student programs in both China and greater East Asia for Georgia Tech.

Avery Goldstein is professor of political science and associate director of the Christopher H. Browne Center for International Politics at the University of Pennsylvania and senior fellow at the Foreign Policy Research Institute in Philadelphia. He is the author of Rising to the Challenge: China's Grand Strategy and International Security (Stanford University Press, 2005), Deterrence and Security in the 21st Century: China, Britain, France, and the Enduring Legacy of the Nuclear Revolution (Stanford University Press, 2000), and From Bandwagon to Balance-of-Power Politics: Structural Constraints and Politics in China, 1949–1978 (Stanford University Press, 1991).

Peter Hays Gries is assistant professor of political science at the University of Colorado, Boulder, and director of the Sino-American Security Dialogue. He is author of China's New Nationalism: Pride, Politics, and Diplomacy (University of California Press, 2004) and co-editor of State and Society in 21st Century China: Crisis, Contention, and Legitimation (RoutledgeCurzon, 2004), as well as author of over a dozen journal articles and book chapters.

Alastair Iain Johnston is the Laine Professor of China in World Affairs in the Government Department at Harvard University. Johnston is the author of Cultural Realism: Strategic Culture and Grand Strategy in Chinese History (Princeton University Press, 1995), and co-editor of Engaging China: The Management of an Emerging Power (Routledge, 1999). He has written on socialization theory, strategic culture, China's participation in international institutions, Chinese nuclear doctrine and arms control, and Party-Army relations in China, among other topics.

Samuel S. Kim (M.I.A. and Ph.D., Columbia) is adjunct professor of political science and senior research scholar at the Weatherhead East Asian Institute, Columbia University. He is the author or editor of twenty-one books, including, most recently, The International Relations of Northeast Asia (ed., Rowman & Littlefield, 2004) and The Two Koreas in the Global Community (forthcoming).

Margaret M. Pearson is professor of government and politics at the University of Maryland, College Park. She received her Ph.D. in political science from Yale University. Her publications include the books Joint Ventures in the People's Republic of China (Princeton University Press, 1991) and China's New Business Elite: The Political Results of Economic Reform (University of California Press, 1997), as well as articles in World Politics, China Journal, Modern China, China Business Review, and other journals.

Robert S. Ross is professor of political science at Boston College, associate, John King Fairbank Center for East Asian Research, Harvard University, and senior advisor, Security Studies Program, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. His current research focuses on Chinese security policy and U.S.-China relations, in particular Chinese use of force and deterrence in East Asia. His recent publications include Normalization of U.S.-China Relations: An International History (Asia Center, Harvard University, 2001), of which he was co-editor.

Michael Yahuda is professor emeritus of international relations at the London School of Economics and visiting scholar at the Sigur Center for Asian Studies, Elliott School of International Affairs, George Washington University. He enjoys an international reputation as a specialist on the international relations of East Asia. He has published more than 150 journal articles and book chapters and is the author of six books, the latest being The International Politics of the Asia-Pacific (1996; rev ed., RoutledgeCurzon, 2004).